EDITOR'S NOTES

By Tim Redmond

> Tredmond@sfbg.com

It was hard in the good old days. Back when we were young and San Francisco was cheap and I was really cool with my long hair and motorcycle and stuff. You could rent an apartment for $200 a month, and even though we weren't making much money in those days, there was plenty left over for drugs.

Back then, a guy like me would never have respected a politician like Gavin Newsom. You know: Party pooper. High-society twit. He even blamed his drinking for his tawdry affairs; we always thought our tawdry affairs were the best reason for our drinking. And we never went into rehab. How, like, Betty Ford can you be?

But now I'm older and have a family and take cholesterol medication and I've come to realize how much I like Gavin Newsom. I mean, I don't like him, not all Beth Spotswood or anything, but he's growing on me.

I remember when he was running for reelection, and he came down to the Guardian to talk to us, and I asked him why he should get another term when the city was so eminently fucked up, and he said: "Gee, why did I even bother to get up this morning?"

That's the kind of question you'd never hear Jerry Brown or John Garamendi ask. They know why they got up this morning; they are past the time of wonder and self-doubt.

Old farts is what they are.

So this week we endorse Gavin — Our Mayor — for governor of California. You won't read that in SF Weekly — they don't even do endorsements, pathetic little shits.

In other news, I'm happy to announce that the Guardian has settled its lawsuit with SF Weekly and Village Voice Media.

The JROTC horror show

By Kim-Shree Maufas

OPINION I wish that the adults who want to keep the JROTC program in San Francisco public schools would stop throwing the JROTC students under the bus and blaming the bus driver.

In particular, I'm referring to the March 24 Board of Education meeting, where a resolution about JROTC by commissioners Jill Wynn and Rachel Norton was presented as a first-reading agenda item, which, under our rules, denotes that it should be referred to committee for further discussion. There usually isn't any public commentary on first-reading items because that can occur at the committee meeting, then at the full board meeting when the item is returned for its second reading.

This is the first time that any discussion of JROTC has been on the agenda this year. But adults and kids in support of the program have been turning out to board meetings regularly. And while I've been president, the board has offered deference to the JROTC students, moving public comment earlier in the meeting nearly every time the students have shown up.

Before the March 24 meeting, supporters and opponents of the program were warned that it was only a first reading, that public comment would not be taken out of order, and that each side would have five minutes to make its case. Every elected official who planned on attending was informed of those rules. The ridiculousness that ensued as the board's business and meeting carried on late into the evening came from, and was promoted by, selfish adults interested only in media attention and not concerned about whether this program can be sustained, in its current format, in San Francisco's public schools.

THE PROBLEM: BANKS ARE LOADED DOWN WITH BAD INVESTMENTS THEY ARE UNABLE TO SELL FOR THE ARTIFICIALLY INFLATED PRICES THEY WOULD PREFER TO RECEIVE!

IT'S A DRAIN ON OUR ENTIRE ECONOMY! AND OBVIOUSLY THE GOVERNMENT CANNOT INTERVENE DIRECTLY, LEST WE INVOKE THE SPECTRE OF NATIONALIZATION!

TRULY, NOTHING COULD BE MORE TERRIFYING!

THE SOLUTION: LOAN UP TO A TRILLION DOLLARS TO INVESTORS TO PURCHASE THOSE SO-CALLED "TOXIC ASSETS" AT ARTIFICIALLY INFLATED PRICES--WHILE PROMISING TO COVER ANY LOSSES THEY MIGHT INCUR!

AND THEN THE BANKS WILL RESUME LENDING, THE ECONOMY WILL REVIVE, AND EVERYBODY LIVES HAPPILY EVER AFTER!

IT'S ELEGANT IN ITS NON-SIMPLICITY!

RIGHT-WING NUTJOBS SEE THE PLAN AS FURTHER PROOF THAT OBAMA IS A SOCIALIST.

DO YOU KNOW WHAT IT'S CALLED WHEN THE GOVERNMENT BENDS OVER BACKWARDS TO FUND PRIVATE INVESTORS AND AVOID THE SLIGHTEST HINT OF NATIONALIZATION?

The BART Board is clueless

EDITORIAL The senseless and horrifying murder of four Oakland police officers March 21 has cast a pall over law enforcement agencies all over the Bay Area. It's renewed calls for a federal ban on assault weapons, which is long overdue. (It's also reminded us why a daily newspaper can be so valuable — Chronicle coverage of the incident, with numerous reporters quickly responding, is the kind of journalism that won't happen if the city's only major daily dies.)

Unfortunately, it's also taken the focus away from other police issues, and while we mourn the four deaths of veteran officers who were killed trying to do their jobs, we can't stop trying to solve the problems of cops who lack training, supervision, and oversight.

In that context, there is no other way to say this: the BART Board of Directors is as clueless as any governmental organization we've seen since the administration of George W. Bush declared victory in Iraq.

In the past 17 years, BART police officers have improperly shot and killed three people. There have been hundreds of complaints of unnecessary use of force. Most recently, a BART cop shot a young man point blank, and video recordings of the incident have created widespread anger and unrest.

Yet there is still nothing resembling a civilian oversight agency for that 200-member force — and the BART Board members are once again asking the public to trust them to take care of the situation.

Assembly Member Tom Ammiano and state Sen. Leland Yee are sponsoring state legislation that would force the BART Board to establish a San Francisco-style office of citizen complaints to handle all civilian complaints about BART police officer conduct. There are ways Assembly Bill 312 can be improved, and Ammiano, who is guiding the measure through its first legislative hearings, is open to productive suggestions. But when the BART Board sent a delegation to meet with Ammiano, the transit directors had only one basic message: they said AB 312 was "too prescriptive" — that is, it sought to set clear, strong rules for what BART has to do. BART would rather that the Legislature make some broad suggestions but let the folks who run the district shape the final outcome.

That's simply unacceptable. BART has had plenty of time to address this problem, and plenty of notice that something is terribly wrong. In 1992 a BART cop shot and killed 20-year-old Jerold Hall near the Hayward Station, firing a shotgun into the back of Hall's head as the unarmed young man was walking away. The shooting violated BART's own police procedures and the rules that govern the use of deadly force at nearly every modern law enforcement agency in America — but the officer received no disciplinary action, not even a reprimand. In 2001 another BART cop shot and

AETA AND FREE SPEECH

There's a very good reason the ACLU never objected to the Animal Enterprise Terrorism Act (AETA) when it came up in Congress ("When protesters become 'terrorists,'" 3/25/09) Whatever the animal-rights lunatic fringe now says about the law, it explicitly and forcefully protects the First Amendment rights of protesters.

Here's what the law says: "Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit any expressive conduct (including peaceful picketing or other peaceful demonstration) protected from legal prohibition by the First Amendment to the Constitution; [or] to create new remedies for interference with activities protected by the free speech or free exercise clauses of the First Amendment to the Constitution, regardless of the point of view expressed."

Anyone complaining that the AETA is an end-run around free speech rights either hasn't read it, or doesn't understand it.

GENDER RATING IS ALWAYS WRONG

I completely agree with state Sen. Mark Leno that we need to end the practice of gender rating for health insurance ("Pricing women out of health care," 3/25/09). But it would be great if he extended his bill to auto insurance and life insurance as well.

In all three cases, insurance companies charge one gender more because that gender tends to incur more costs. It's a business decision, but that still doesn't make it right, because they're discriminating based on a factor that none of us can control.

The yelling and grandstanding by the adults for nearly three of the students' allotted five minutes was an embarrassment to everyone. And those adults who stepped in front of the children — uninvited — then had the nerve to blame the Board of Education for not bending to their will.

The issues with this program are real — the teacher credentialing, the cost of the program to the district, the accessibility for all students desiring to become potential first responders for their neighborhoods and school sites in case of a municipal emergency, and, of course, the military aspect. The Board of Education, I believe, has to look beyond the glitz of a program that have been with us for eons and beyond the TV sound bites that grossly distort the facts. I've been moved to the middle on this issue because of the inflammatory behavior from people associated with both ends — the extreme ends.

I am hopeful that many of you will join me in looking carefully at the alternatives at hand, alternatives that would allow all students to participate. Come to the committee meetings, be informed, ask your questions, and be open to hearing something new.

But put aside the angry accusations and condemnations toward those who want to do the right thing for our children just because they don't jump when you say they should. SFG killed a mentally ill man who was lying naked on the ground. Again, BART declared the shooting perfectly okay. With that kind of lack of oversight, it's not surprising that Oscar Grant was shot and killed early New Year's Day — the BART police have never been held accountable for improper killings.

And the BART Board has never done a damn thing about it.

Now there is a special board committee that's supposed to study police oversight. It has never held a single public meeting. Board member Tom Radulovich, who represents San Francisco and sits on the committee, told us there will be public meetings soon. But so far, all that the four-member panel has done is hold private discussions with local interest groups, with no public notice. We would argue that those meetings were a clear violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the Brown Act, which mandates that government agencies hold open meetings. But more than that, the closed meetings suggest that the BART Board has no understanding of the public anger and impatience with its 17-year record of failing to keep its police force in line.

Ammiano and Yee should refuse to compromise the basic premise of their bill. The state of California, which gave BART the right to create a police force, must now mandate exactly how that force will be managed. The BART Board had its chance and failed. We simply can't trust that ineffective agency to get it right this time. SFG

LETTERS

The difference, of course, is that in the cases of auto and life insurance, it is men who get charged more. I find it sad that no one seems to care or even notice when men are the ones discriminated against. It would be a truly progressive and visionary act if Leno amended Senate Bill 54 to include a ban on gender rating for all types of insurance, not just those that discriminate against women. Gender discrimination is wrong, no matter which gender is on the receiving end.

NOT A NEWSOM FAN

I'd give my left nut just to see Gavin Newsom come in dead last in the California Democratic primary. By the way, it's nice to see that Newsom is getting some negative press FINALLY (though not from the Chron, of course). The Los Angeles Times has been digging up everything from his affairs and drinking problems to his general incompetence and hair gel faux pas. The L.A. Times even quoted Aaron Peskin bad-mouthing Newsom for the oil spill fiasco. I think that "dereliction of duty" was the term Peskin used. Well played, Aaron, well played.

Little House demolition stirs fresh controversy between developers and preservationists

By Rebecca Bowe
rebeccab@sfbg.com

It may seem odd that the loss of a two-story vacant building would ruffle so many feathers, spur multiple phone calls to the police, and inspire a push from Board of Supervisors president David Chiu to make changes to San Francisco's building code. But the March 16 demolition of the Little House, a 148-year-old Russian Hill cottage on Lombard Street, struck a nerve and raised a slew of questions — many of which continue to go unanswered.

Controversy may have started swirling because a property that has stood since Abraham Lincoln's presidency was razed with scarcely a week's notice on a swiftly issued emergency-demolition permit. It might also have been because the co-owners of the property, Michael Cassidy and James Nunemacher, represent the high-profile Residential Builders Association and the real estate firm Vanguard Properties, respectively — both politically well-connected entities that have been behind projects in the past that drew criticism from various citizens groups.

The Little House, which previously stood at 1268 Lombard St., was by some accounts one of the 10 oldest homes in San Francisco. Under the California Environmental Quality Act, a building of that age would normally require an environmental impact report before the Planning Department can issue a demolition permit. According to Department of Building Inspections spokesman William Strawn, the emergency demolition permit was issued after a structural engineer who had inspected the property on behalf of the owners sent a letter expressing concern that it was in danger of collapse. DBI staffers, including department manager Ed Sweeney, inspected it, and Strawn said the permit process started once they concluded that it presented a safety hazard.

Word that the cottage would be razed sparked an outcry from a group of concerned neighbors and historic preservationists, including architect F. Joseph Butler, who says he discovered it 15 years ago when he learned that it was one of the few structures on Russian Hill to escape the 1906 earthquake and ensuing fires. Butler says he doubts the building was in danger of collapse, and says he tried in vain to convince DBI to allow him to bring in a third party who could offer a second opinion. When asked about that possibility, Strawn said, "The building department would not rely on a third-party source."

Before and after: Little House was one of the city's oldest structures until it was recently demolished using "emergency" permits.

The building was torn down March 16, with tensions simmering in the days leading up to it. When a demolition crew showed up March 9 ready to go to work, several days before the emergency permit had actually been issued, a neighbor who was trying to save the cottage phoned the police to halt the demolition. Police reports show that a few days later when the crew arrived on the property and were greeted by a small group of protesters, the cops were called twice more — by both sides. Joe Cassidy, Michael Cassidy's brother and a prominent member of the Residential Builders Association, is the president of the demolition company.

Protesters charged that the building was neglected on purpose to hasten its demise, so the owners could skirt the regulatory EIR process. "It appears the property owner has exceeded the scope of their permit to replace dry rot by structurally damaging the building and claiming it is in imminent danger of falling down," Cynthia Servetnick, an architect with the SF Preservation Consortium, wrote in an e-mail to the City Attorney's Office not long before the demolition. Building Commissioner Debra Walker, who also inspected it, noted that "the windows were out, and the doors were out in the back.

It looked to me like people had just left it open."

Megan Allison Wade, who blogged about the demolition of the Lombard Street house, wrote in an e-mail to zoning administrator Larry Badiner that she perceived "a very clear case of willful neglect in an attempt to degrade the property into demolish-able condition."

Badiner responded: "This emergency demolition permit supersedes historic preservation and housing preservation procedures. ... Without commenting on whether this is willful neglect, public safety would trump any concerns regarding how the building became unsafe."

An article published by the San Francisco Chronicle noted that Nunemacher denied that he and Cassidy had neglected the property. When we called Nunemacher to ask him directly, the conversation didn't go so well. He said he was busy, and told us to read the other news reports. When asked if this meant he didn't want to comment, he said, "You are putting words into my mouth. I don't like what you are doing." Then he threatened to call the police.

Whether or not the property was in fact neglected on purpose is a question that may never be answered conclusively. City Attorney's Office spokesperson Matt Dorsey told us he was not at liberty to say whether an investigation is underway, but it's clear that any investigation would have to go forward without a crucial element — the house.

Attorney Arthur Levy made a last-ditch effort to try to save the Little House just before it came down, sending a letter transcribed on his office's letterhead to a list of city department heads. "What makes San Francisco different is our built environment," Levy says. "It seems to me that when a property owner willfully neglects a building, and that results in demolition ... there ought to be some consequences."

For some of those engaged in the fight over the cottage, the incident brings to mind past controversies involving the same players and others close to them. When an historic Victorian shipwright's cottage at 900 Innes Ave. — which the city designated as a historic landmark last year — was under the ownership of developer Joe Cassidy, he had plans to demolish it and build condos, retail space, and a kayak center. In that 2005 battle between the RBA developer and preservationists, the preservationists won.

Another project that involved both Joe Cassidy and Nunemacher was a residential development at Fourth and Freelon streets. At the time that project was being permitted, one of the top-selling agents at Vanguard Properties, Jean-Paul Samaha, worked as a liaison between the Board of Supervisors and the Planning Department. In 2005, architect Kepa Ashkenasy lodged an Ethics Commission complaint against Samaha alleging he had failed to disclose a $100,000 loan from Nunemacher, who had been his romantic partner at the time, even when he was in a position of testifying before the Planning Commission in his professional capacity about the Fourth and Freelon development, Ethics records show.

The complaint was dismissed after Samaha lodged a counter-complaint against Ashkenasy with the Human Rights Commission, noting that loans from spouses and domestic partners are exempt from financial disclosure rules, and charging that her allegation was motivated by a kind of homophobia, a HRC document shows.

Ashkenasy told the Guardian that she only sought to illuminate a conflict of interest — and added that she is a lesbian.

Servetnick said the case of the Little House highlights a broader issue of vacant historic properties throughout the city that are allowed to go to waste because it's more profitable to knock them down and build new. Draft legislation introduced by Board President David Chiu seeks to address this concern by requiring owners of vacant properties to register their empty buildings with the city so that inspectors can play a more proactive role in detecting problems before it's too late.

At a March 26 Planning Commission meeting, Charles Marsteller, former head of government watchdog group Common Cause, told commissioners he had attended the demolition of the Lombard Street cottage. When it came down, he says, he realized how unique it was and earnestly told planning commissioners that he thinks the Little House should be reconstructed, and the lot turned into a park.

As for the demolition, "It was just a put-on by some insiders in City Hall working the network that they normally work," Marsteller says. "And it shouldn't have happened." SFBG

California's a tough place. It's a state of clashing values — of coastal liberals who want good public services, environmental protection, and gay marriage and central valley conservatives who want nothing of the sort. It's run by a fractious, divisive legislature that desperately needs a firm hand. It's a state so big and complex that it has defied the abilities of generations of talented politicians, from Jerry Brown and George Deukmejian to Gray Davis and Arnold Schwarzenegger.

And yet, we refuse to give up on the Golden State. It's been the Guardian's home since 1966, the place where we launched what would be the first alternative paper on the West Coast. It's a place with endless possibilities, from sunshine to public power to tax reform, and we can't risk its future on another worthless, wimpy chief executive.

That's why we're taking the unusual step of announcing an early endorsement for governor. We're backing the only candidate strong enough, smart enough, sober enough, and secure enough in his own self worth and image to take on the Sisyphean task of running California. Today, we're endorsing Gavin Newsom.

The mayor of San Francisco may look like a lightweight pop, but that's unfair — we know him better. This is a young man who grew up cleaning toilets then went on to found his own successful business, using nothing but the wealth and connections of a billionaire family friend to help him. A man who has never spent a day in his life without comfortable surroundings yet developed a remarkable empathy for the less fortunate, and capitalized on their misery to promote his career. A man who travels the world in the company of movies stars and brilliant entrepreneurs, fearlessly promoting his home town while the rest of the whiney little twerps at City Hall just sit in committee meetings and bitch.

Losers.

Newsom's platform is perfect for this state, at this time. He supports marriage; after all, he's done it twice himself. He's even gotten involved in the marriages of close friends and advisors! And he thinks the rest of us, no matter what our sexual proclivities, should have the right to be miserable too.

Newsom talks not just of change, but of "gigantic order-of-magnitude change." He thinks we should all come together to solve the state's problems instead of pointing fingers of blame — and isn't that just the sweetest?

In fact, Newsom believes in almost everything. He's a centrist, pro-business conservative in Southern California. In the Castro District, he's so gay you almost want to forgive the hair. In Sacramento, he's centered and focused on the problems we face. He's so politically flexible

For governor: Gavin Newsom

And why SF's sexy, sassy superstar should have his sights on the Oval Office

he hasn't taken any real positions on anything — which means when he wins, he'll be able to govern exactly the way he wants.

There are other candidates in this race, and still more may jump in before it's over. But today, we can pretty much rule out anyone else.

Jerry Brown, the attorney general, former governor, and former mayor of Oakland has plenty of experience and isn't afraid to take on the special interests. He's so tough he once hung up on Bill Clinton! He meditates, he likes art, he has a special friend who was once in the French Foreign Legion, and he used to do Linda Ronstadt. Back when she was really, really hot. But his ideas are all old, and he's pretty old, and we're just not feeling it this time.

Then there's John Garamendi, who used to think that juvenile delinquents should be put in boot camps, like the Marines. Now he thinks we should raise taxes to pay for education. He the only one in the race who looks remotely like a governor, but his head and hands are so freakishly enormous that he might not even be human, and this is no time to vote for an alien.

And, of course, Antonio Villaraigosa. His city is bigger than Gavin's, but that's not what counts. He's supposed to be all Latin and hot-blooded and shit, but he only slept with a reporter. Gavin porked his own campaign manager's wife!

We rest our case.

The Economist, which is published somewhere in Europe and thus knows all about California, ran a profile of Newsom last week titled "Young man in a hurry."

"Not content with running a city loathed by conservatives," the report said, "Mr. Newsom now wishes to take charge of an entire state."

Roll that around your tongue: "Newsom." "Take charge." Kinda makes us tingle.

The magazine concludes: "And after California, who knows?" Who, indeed — and that's the best part of this wonderful campaign. If Newsom wins this race, he could join the likes of such giants as Ronald Reagan and Richard Nixon, Californians who went on to the White House. And why not? He's young, handsome, and sometimes thinks he's Robert Kennedy, who is blissfully dead and can't present any real challenge to that delusion.

In fact, Barack Obama will be ready to leave office just about the time Newsom will be getting bored of running California. It's almost as if, somehow, it was Meant to Be This Way.

Allow us, for a moment, to dream: President Newsom. A new Camelot, led by a sexy, sassy, superstar, matched with the only first lady who ever showed her tits in a Hollywood movie. It just about takes our breath away.

The Bush administration has rightfully been discredited and is now held in ill repute, but we shouldn't forget how effectively Karl Rove and the Republicans influenced public opinion and achieved electoral success. Team Newsom was paying close attention — and our mayor's brain trust shrewdly adopted key Rove tactics in trying to sell their candidate to the people of San Francisco and California.

In this era of declining journalistic resources, they write their own reality and deliver it directly to voters with the latest high-tech tools like Facebook and Twitter, unfiltered by reporters and unhindered by actual facts, history, or context. It's a brilliant strategy that turns Newsom's biggest weaknesses into his greatest strengths. So the mayor who stood with Pacific Gas and Electric Co. to oppose higher clean energy standards becomes the greenest politician on the planet. Hey — he says it. He tweets it. It has to be true!

Check it out: The guy single-handedly blocking compromise on the biggest budget deficit in city history becomes the governor who will save the state from financial ruin. Presto! And the leader who sat on the sidelines while Sup. Tom Ammiano fought through business community opposition to create Healthy San Francisco becomes the greatest champion of universal healthcare, simply by saying so in millions of press releases and in interviews with every out-of-town journalist who will listen to him. And they do, they do!

California can't wait for an ordinary candidate with actual policy positions and a proven record of accomplishment — not now. Not on April 1, 2009. Today, we proudly endorse our main man at City Hall, Gavin Newsom for governor. sfbc

You remember that silly thing — we sued because the Weekly was supposedly selling ads below cost and trying to put us out of business? Well, after much discussion, we've come to the conclusion that newspapers are all pretty much doomed anyway, and we might as well stop fighting and try to protect our collective jobs and collective asses as long as we can.

You may have read that Rep. Nancy Pelosi, after meeting with Guardian Publisher Bruce Brugmann, agreed to ask the Justice Department to stop worrying about antitrust laws when it comes to newspaper mergers. With that assurance, the Weekly and the Guardian have decided to form a joint operating agreement. Both papers will continue to publish, but the VVM chain will control all finances and set all editorial policy. Under the terms of the agreement, the Guardian will drop its legal action and "shut the fuck up" about PG&E, sunshine, media concentration, rent control, and over-development.

As usual, Brugmann was not available for comment and declined to make any statement to the press. But I can safely say that he and his wife, Jean Dibble, are prepared to retire to the Caribbean home they bought with the big bags of money VVM paid to end the hostilities. Bruce will continue to write his blog, but he'll talk about snorkeling a lot more.

The new Guardian publisher will be Andy Van de Voorde, currently VVM's hit man in Denver who did such a bang-up job covering our trial. He has graciously allowed me to continue writing this column, as long as I promise, starting today, April 1, never to imply that he has ever had carnal relations with a goat.

Sure thing, Andy! Welcome aboard! sfbc

AMERICA'S NEXT TOP SUPERVISOR

Ask Nate

The Guardian introduces a new weekly advice column from Nathan Ballard, press secretary to Mayor Gavin Newsom. We hope you enjoy his insights as much as we always have.

Dear Nate:

Times are tough in San Francisco for a lot of people, but my life seems to be bottoming out these days. My good city job just got eliminated, the after school program my kids love was cut, my elderly grandmother just lost her home health nurse, and the police still have no idea who murdered my husband last year. He was even shot right in front of one of those crime cameras. What should I do?

Desperate for Help

Dear Dessie:

I reject the premise of your question. Things are going great in San Francisco, particularly under this mayor's strong leadership. But we feel your pain, which seems to stem from the Board of Supervisors refusing to give the Police Department more money or the authority to constantly monitor those cameras. Sup. Aaron Peskin is the reason your husband's killer hasn't been caught. He may actually be the murderer.

Nate

Dear Nate:

I was thinking about going into politics. Do you have any advice for someone considering running for office?

Budding Candidate

Dear Bud:

As my boss has repeatedly said, being mayor is the toughest and most thankless job in the world. He's constantly dealing with uppity supervisors and complaining constituents, at least when he's in town. And if you're one of those spineless, whiny so-called progressives, my advice is to just do something else. Get a real job, something in the private sector. But if you share Mayor Newsom's belief in building a better San Francisco with more public-private partnerships — and you've got a lot of rich friends — I say go for it. But make sure you hire the best advisers by calling Storefront Political Media and Earned Media. We —, er, uh, I mean they really know what they're doing.

Nate

Dear Nate:

I'm new to San Francisco and trying to understand the political dynamics here. Is the central struggle really between progressives and moderates? Those are the two labels I hear the most, but it doesn't make much sense to me. What about liberal vs. conservative?

Political Science Student

Dear Poli-Sci:

I reject the label progressive, and so does the San Francisco Chronicle now that we've convinced them to. So actually the central struggle in this town is between the radical and unrealistic ultra-liberals and moderates like Gavin Newsom. The mayor can be a fiscal conservative when he needs to be, and he's liberal on social issues, which makes him a moderate and therefore the voice of reason. He could even be a progressive on some issues, if there were such a thing as a progressive, which there's not. But he's never ultra-anything, because that would make him crazy, which he also isn't. Is that clear?

Nate

Dear Nate:

I'm a teenager who's having a moral dilemma. Our mom has been working really hard lately, so my younger brother decided to clean the whole house one day to make her feel better. I thought he was lame and just watched TV. But when mom came home from work and my brother wasn't there, she was so happy about the house that she gave me $20 because she thought I did it. My brother doesn't know about the money and doesn't seem to expect anything for his efforts. Should I tell them the truth?

Lazy Teen

Dear L.T.:

What do you mean by "the truth"? I've always believed that truth is a relative thing. Did you try to sabotage your brother's plan? Of course not. You probably even moved out of the way while he vacuumed, and I'm sure the noise made it difficult for you to enjoy your television show, right? The reality is that you were probably more of a participant in this cleanup effort than you think. And if your brother is such a do-gooder that he'd clean the whole house without expectation of reward, then what does he need with money or praise? But judging by the fact that you asked this question, I'm sure that you can use this boost and you should just smile and take it.

Nate

Dear Nate:

How can you represent such a scoundrel, someone who fucked his campaign manager's wife, takes credit for other people's ideas, spends more time on his political ambitions than running the city, and seems to have utter contempt for democracy and public process? How do you sleep at night?

Pissed Off Progressive

Dear POP:

First of all, I reject the premise of your question. Gavin Newsom is a man of integrity and generosity who works tirelessly for this city and has no ambitions other than making San Francisco a better place. Second, I usually take an Ambien with a double shot of Jameson's.

Nate

Dear Nate:

Is it wrong to lie?
Lying Lily

Dear Lily:

No, but it is wrong to get caught lying, so be careful.

Nate

Dear Nate:

Advocates for the homeless in San Francisco seem to be reasonable, fair-minded...

Dear XX:

Stop! I reject the premise of your question. Next.

Nate

Dear Nate:

I'm so confused. My boss and I were sleeping with the same woman, and she was married to someone else in the office, and eventually my boss got caught (although he managed to keep his job). Through it all, though, I never said a word. Now I'm finding myself attracted to my ex-boss's wife, and I think she's hot for me too. Can I act on this? Doesn't my boss owe me?

Perplexed in SF

Dear Perp:

Go ahead — I wouldn't worry about it. That sort of thing happens all the time where I work. Just get a good PR guy, pretend to go into rehab, and it will all blow over. SFBG

Green-collar heat

By Sarah Phelan
sarah@sfbg.com

GREEN CITY Local residents, workers, and businesses are anxious to learn who and what will be stimulated by the billions of dollars that President Barack Obama authorized for release when he signed the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act.

Since January 2008, unemployment in the Bay Area has risen from 4.9 percent to 8.4 percent, according to the U.S. Department of Labor Statistics, and house prices and consumer spending are down.

Despite all the anxiety, representatives from local low-income community groups hope to turn Obama's stimulus package into an opportunity to make local government accountable for creating decent green-collar jobs. And Sups. Eric Mar, John Avalos, Sophie Maxwell, and Board President David Chiu seem happy to help further the community in this environmentally friendly cause.

Mar scheduled a March 23 hearing of the board's Land Use and Economic Development Committee "to obtain community input on the creation of jobs, particularly green-collar jobs, in San Francisco as the city positions itself for federal investment dollars."

"The hearing was the first step toward building a grassroots coalition to hold government accountable," continued Mar, who worries that the Mayor's Office is not sharing enough information related to the stimulus package. "Labor and community groups, not just department heads and City Hall, should be at the table."

At the hearing, representatives from the city's Office of Economic and Workforce Development said that a substantial part of the first wave of stimulus package dollars has already been allocated, mostly to shovel-ready projects such as the Doyle Drive rebuild and massive development projects at Treasure Island and the Hunter's Point Shipyard.

OEWD representatives also indicated that more waves of formula funding are expected, for which San Francisco must compete with other cities, and that the city's Department of Technology is constructing a Web site to track all local money from Obama's $787 billion package.

OEWD deputy director Jennifer Entine Matz says community-based organizations, unions, and community colleges need to work together to ensure that people are successfully brought through any work program. "In many cases, green collar jobs are existing jobs," Matz said. "If we are successful in training people with green power technology, they will be more marketable here and beyond. We can also train and modify people in existing programs."

But representatives from the Chinese Progressive Association, PODER (People Organizing to Demand Environmental and Economic Rights), and POWER (People Organizing to Win Employment Rights) expressed their belief that stimulus package funds should go to help low-income communities, not rich corporations.

"Let's make sure we stimulate quality to make sure we stimulate the economy," said PODER's Oscar Grande, who warned against using the funds on low-paid jobs with few advancement opportunities. He and others suggested tracking what communities receive funding. "We want to go past the green hype, the green-washing, and the green lifestyle marketing," Grande said.

Raquel Pinderhughes, an urban studies professor at San Francisco State University who helped Berkeley's Green Business Council and Oakland's Green Jobs Corp program, defined green-collar jobs as "blue collar jobs in green businesses."

"Green collar jobs can function to get more people out of poverty," Pinderhughes said. "They can provide living wages. They have low barriers to entry. They provide an opportunity for occupational mobility. They are inherently dignified, and they have a shortage of entry-level workers, so there is room for people."

But Pinderhughes warned that cities must link improving environmental quality to social justice to avoid creating temporary jobs and preserve industrially zoned lands for green-collar jobs. She also said that cities must fund case management services "so folks don't quickly drop out."

The Land Use Committee has scheduled an April 6 continuation to address a plethora of outstanding issues like how much money is going to specific corporations and departments, the division of funds between public transportation and freeway projects, and how much Lennar Corp. is getting for its Hunters Point Shipyard/Candlestick Point redevelopment project. SFBG

Taking the heat

Chef Barham isn't easy on his students — but then, it's a harsh world out there

By Diana Dunkelberger
 > culture@sfbg.com

Chef Damon Barham, an instructor at the California Culinary Academy in the Potrero Hill District, is 32, with boyish good looks, a wide, expressive mouth, and the energy and build of a cross-country runner. He has a nonchalant way of spicing up explanations with Borat impressions ("vary nihiice") and fiery mamma mia!, pinching-the-air Italian accents. If online rating sites give any indication of general opinion, students absolutely adore him. "Chef Damon ROCKS!!" gushes a former pupil on RateMyProfessors.com. "There's so much knowledge one can squeeze out of my fave chef!! :)"

But Barham, who teaches a restaurant production class, is unafraid of dishing out blatant criticism. "No," he declared frankly to a couple of students who'd been hard at work on an elaborate plating of their amuse-bouche of rice cakes and snow peas. "It's a mess."

It's absolutely crucial that Barham give his students a "sense of reality," as he calls it. The class he teaches, restaurant production, comes at the tail end of CCA's culinary arts program, following ten months of plodding through slow-paced courses like kitchen math and principles of European cuisine. In restaurant production, the final two-month course at CCA, Barham leads his eager, though often ham-fisted, students through the harried, breakneck creation of haute cuisine for paying customers at Carême 350, the student-run restaurant.

After Barham's restaurant production class and a three-month unpaid externship at a restaurant, graduates sink or swim in the real world. And, as one CCA grad put it to me, in order to make it in the food industry, "you have to be as serious as a heart attack."

On my recent tour of CCA's campus — a chef's paradise of stainless steel, enormous state-of-the-art appliances, and soaring views of downtown — a couple of students in a European cooking class admitted to me that they were "definitely a little nervous" about cooking food for paying customers. But they were thrilled for the chance to have Barham as an instructor.

After spending an evening in Barham's restaurant production class, it was easy to see why.

"Hey, guys!" hollered Barham at his five students, who were scrambling to assemble their mises-en-place. He crouched, one hand balled in a fist at his side, and the other pointing stiffly toward the dining room. "We've got one hour till people start walking in that door!" he roared. Barham circled through the kitchen, clapping rhythmically and yelling, "Let's go!" Students visibly picked up the pace. One student directly in front of me glanced up at Barham, then resumed slicing a bulb of fennel with renewed gusto.

A few minutes later, Barham interrupted a student, Benjamin Hill, who was painstakingly arranging vegetables for a duck confit. "Don't contrive things," Barham chided, repositioning the food. "Don't waste time doing a stupid little cucumber fan or a sunburst of carrots. Just put a pile of carrots on the plate."

"I was really pumped to be coming in here and working with Chef Damon," Hill told me later as he spread some bright, buttercup-colored

HOTEL HARD KNOCKS

When Barham graduated from California Culinary Academy a decade ago, he was no stranger to the rigors of the industry. Long before Barham attended CCA, he went to what he calls "the school of hotel hard knocks." He started working in kitchens as an 11-year-old, washing dishes and shaping meatballs in an Italian restaurant in Arizona. "I had these old Italian guys pouring me glasses of Barbera, glasses of Chianti," he remembered.

When he was 14, his father, a hotel manager, would call on him to wash dishes, chop vegetables, or cook on the line if the dishwasher, prep guy, or line cook didn't show. And if a housekeeper, bellhop, server, bar back, or busboy called in sick, he'd cover for them, too. On the weekends, while other kids were out playing baseball, he'd be working an assortment of jobs, occasionally pulling 16-hour days.

Barham continued cooking on the line and serving tables through high school and beyond. By the time he was 22, he landed a job as an assistant wine buyer at The Fish Market, a seafood restaurant in San Mateo. Not long afterward, the restaurant owner offered to promote him to a managerial position. But Barham wasn't interested. His passion lay elsewhere.

So in 1999, he enrolled in CCA to "fill in the gaps" in his knowledge. "We had these really crazy tests," he recalled. "If you missed three days of class, you failed." But he worked hard and estimates that he ranked fourth in his class.

After he graduated, Barham made rent and repaid his CCA student loans — which he continues to pay down today — with a medley of jobs: private chefing, cooking on the line, waiting tables, and a part-time job as the culinary assistant to Martin Yan of Yan Can Cook fame. (With a sly smile, Barham remembered that one of his tasks entailed feeding Yan's koi.)

Then, in the spring of 2004, Barham called the CCA to see whether the school was hiring. He ended up landing a job as an associate instructor in garde manger (in a kitchen, the garde manger prepares the cold food). According to Barham, CCA has changed noticeably since he was a student. "People might argue that it's not as tough as it used to be," he said. "The tests used to be more stringent. If you failed, you just failed."

During his five years as a CCA instructor, Barham has taught classes about foods of the Americas, garde manger, and contemporary European cuisine skills. For the past year, he's been teaching restaurant production, a class that students anticipate with anxiety and excitement.

A SCUFFED DIAMOND

While Barham receives rapturous praise, online and off, the CCA isn't exactly basking in a glowing reputation. Some CCA alumni are unhappy with the return on the $47,400 they invested in their culinary education — particularly when the high-pressure jobs they dreamed of turn out to be elusive.

But Jennifer White, who took the helm as CCA's president in October 2007, has been looking to make changes. The school, she said, was "a diamond that got scuffed and needed to be brought back to its brilliance." She now uses her orientation speech to address cable TV's glamorization of the food industry. "If you think you're going to be on the Food Network," she warns incoming students, "this isn't the place for you."

For his part, Barham feels little sympathy for embittered alumni. "We do the best that we can here to get these people out and prepared for the industry and to be fully functional chefs," he said, sitting at a table in Carême 350 and noshing on a hunk of bread. "But at a certain point," he continued, throwing up his hands, "they gotta leave the nest and fly on their own. If they get eaten by an alligator, they get eaten by an alligator."

I asked Barham if he keeps track of how his former students are faring in the industry. "Not really," he replied with obvious disinterest. He makes an effort not to develop personal relationships with his pupils. "I don't have a bunch of students on my Facebook account," he said. He doesn't take ownership of any of his former students' successes or failures, either. "That would be hugely narcissistic," he said with a stony expression.

What about his current students, who clearly admire him — does he love them back? Not especially. "I'm not trying to be anybody's friend," he told me. Despite the five years Barham's spent behind the sleek, protective walls of the academy, it seems he's maintained the guarded toughness he developed in the "school of hotel hard knocks." He told me if there's one thing he's constantly reminding his students of, it's this: if he ever leaves academia and returns to the industry, "You're gonna be my competition." SFBG

Working the curves

Pole dancing classes graduate from the stripper cliché

By Devyn Ortiz
culture@sfbg.com

Pole dancing classes have become increasingly popular in recent years, and strippers aren't the ones getting schooled. Lawyers, doctors, social workers, stay-at-home moms, even post-menopausal women with gray hair are turning to a turn around the pole to learn more about their bodies and their sexuality. From group classes at gyms to private lessons in home studios, pole dancing can be now learned at any comfort level.

Once a week, eight to 10 women gather in the small, dimly lit, mirrorless classrooms at San Francisco's S-Factor (2159 Filbert, SF. 415-440-6420, www.sfactor.com/SF) to learn pole tricks, stripping techniques, and lap dances. "We like to say that you're teaching your body a new language," says Deb Arana, an instructor at S-Factor. "You need to slow down, think into your curves, play in your girly skin." The classes start with warm-ups based on core strengthening, and moves incorporate yoga, ballet and Pilates.

Each class builds on the one before, and by week three women get to wear their six-inch stripper heels. "Some women are confident enough that they will just carry their heels while walking down the sidewalk or riding the bus, while others tuck them away in their bags," says Arana. "It's amazing to see the changes in the women by the end of the class. I'd say 99 percent are not dancers, but they can flow and move in such a graceful way because the routines are so intuitive."

But perhaps the more significant learning experience comes from the personal and spiritual growth that occurs in the sessions. The small S-Factor classes, which usually have less than a dozen students each, become tight-knit communities. Positive reinforcement from classmates helps women to try new moves, and they encourage one another to take their dancing to a higher level.

Women take the lessons in order to identify with their sexuality as much as they do to get physical exercise. "I thought that the main complaint I would hear would be about being overweight," Arana reveals, "But it's actually women coming in saying 'I don't feel sexy, I've never felt sexy.'"

That attitude changes over the course of the class. "Women become conscious of their feminine and sexual selves," says Arana. "It's not just because we're giving them new moves, but because they're comfortable in their own skins."

"Pole dancing becomes an addiction and a way of life," she explains, a surprising note of conviction entering her soothing, honey-tinted voice. "It's such a journey of self discovery."

S-Factor, whose classes are offered nationwide and bills itself as "the original striptease and pole-dancing-inspired workout," was started by actress Sheila Kelley, who found an intense sense of empowerment in the dancers she watched while researching a role in the movie Dancing at the Blue Iguana (2000). She claims to have started the S-Factor workout to share her newfound physical and emotional state with other women.

Carrying six-inch heels on the bus and learning how to wrap your legs around a pole properly in front of several people is not for all potential pole dancers, though. One-on-one lessons in personal studios can be arranged in San Francisco as well. A former exotic dancer who calls herself Cheri (and who now maintains a career as an economist) runs private lessons out of a classy, modern studio in a quiet residential neighborhood. There is no indication that pole dancing takes place in the unassuming light blue building. Two poles that look like structural supports stand in the center of the second-floor room, and when the lesson starts, Cheri draws the shades, blocking her view of the Bay Bridge to turn her attention to demonstrating pole tricks.

"The important part of pole dancing is making it look good; the workout is secondary," says Cheri. "It's sort of a hidden workout. I don't realize it until I wake up sore the next day and wonder what I did to myself. Then I say, 'Oh, yeah, I was dancing yesterday.'" Light lifting and yoga are helpful supplemental activities to pole dancing, since strength is needed to support your body weight on the pole, and flexibility and mindfulness are essential to proper moves and flow.

Hard-pressed for cash during college, Cheri responded to an ad in the school's paper for exotic dancers at a local club. "At that time, there was no such thing as pole dancing classes, or any sort of instruction," says Cheri. "You just had to watch yourself in the mirror, and watch other dancers and just sort of learn as you go." She used dancing to support travels through Australia and Europe, but dropped it once she settled down in San Francisco and started her career.

One day, Cheri mentioned to her boyfriend that she would dance for him if he bought her a pole. One was obtained quite quickly, of course. The pole began to be used at parties and Cheri's friends started asking her to teach them moves. She realized she had caught on to something, so she started her own studio, called Heels on the Ceiling (www.heelsonthec ceiling.com). Once she found another pole, a few floor mats, and stilts in every size for her students, Cheri was in business.

Bachelorette groups flocked to her studio for Cheri's energetic instruction on floor moves and simple spins. And private students, including mother-daughter pairs, started signing up as well. "I'm a much better educator than a dancer, I think," confesses Cheri. "But at the same time it's harder to dance in front of women than in front of men. Men are simple creatures with simple minds, but women are constantly judging you and sizing you up."

Although she worries about being judged herself, helping women shift their mindsets about their bodies and sexual selves is the primary reason she continues her lessons. "Pole dancing is teaching women how to harness their sexuality through certain tricks and moves," says Cheri. "It helps women shed their sexual and image insecurities."

Advanced dancing seems like quite the workout: Cheri can suspend herself upside-down on the pole, balancing at a graceful diagonal, like a spoon resting inside of a bowl. Then, before you can blink, she'll turn around the pole faster than a record spins, and climb to the top with agility of a cat on a fence.

The physical fitness aspect has made lessons at Heels on the Ceiling more legitimate for women. "Pole dancing has become less politically incorrect recently, because of the workout angle," says Cheri. "I'm glad that society has finally accepted and embraced it." SBFG

UP AND ONWARD: CAREER ADVICE IN A SCARY CLIMATE

With a statewide unemployment rate of 10.5 percent and industries crumbling, it almost seems absurd to think about making upward career moves. But an awful economy doesn't need to equal personal unhappiness in your work life. Dena Snider, a career counselor of 15 years and cofounder of the Bay Area Career Center (www.bayareacareercenter.com), gave us some advice on what to do to for your career in the current economic climate.

Don't stay stuck. If you're not content with your current job, start the process of figuring out what type of work is best for you. Can't get yourself out of bed on a Monday morning? No excitement, energy, or engagement in your work? Sounds like it's time to start searching for a position that will use your skills and make you happier. The economy is in turmoil, which can mean that opportunities are opening up for those keeping an eye out.

Keep perspective. If you've recently been laid off and need to find a job just to pay the bills, keep in mind that it's only temporary. "Take jobs knowing exactly why you are there," says Snider. "Be prepared for your move back into your career when the time comes."

Explore other options. "The best time to figure out what you want to do is when you are employed — you can network, take classes, or volunteer," says Snider. Start planning for a career change several months or a few years from now. If you're unemployed, take advantage of any opportunities you can to gain experience. Snider often meets people who know what they don't want, but not what they do want, and they spend time sorting through hundreds of ideas.

Think outside the box. "People who were passionate about what they did are losing careers right now and not knowing what they'll do," says Snider. "What people did to make a living may not be possible now, but they can find something close." Think about how your talents can be used in a different industry. Perhaps your passions can be channeled though a new outlet. Or you may find that you can revitalize rusty skills or learn new ones.

Be optimistic. "Just because finding the right job is harder now, does not mean it is not possible," Snider reminds us. "Be optimistic — once you figure out what you want, go forward!" (Laura Peach)

Fantastic Planet
 René Laloux's 1973 Fantastic Planet is an animated masterpiece. Packed to overflow with psychedelic colors and surreal asides, it disturbs and delights. In telling the story of the Draags, a giant blue semi-amphibious master race, and the Oms, their tiny humanoid pets and pests, Laloux charts the battle that ensues when one of the Oms chances across consciousness. See a predatory world of macabre distraction where certain beings are naturally endowed with superior attributes that they use only to further their hold on the weak, small, and less fortunate — then turn off the television and go see Fantastic Planet. (D. No One & the Nobodies
 Don't let the self-deprecating name fool you: No One & The Nobodies are a Bay Area band worth knowing. The garage rockers arrive fully fluent in cool nonchalance and woozy post-narcotic fuzz on their Greg Ashley-produced debut Grew Some Feet (Filthy Lesson Records), hereby launched at this release party. Better still, they have the songwriting savvy to do justice to their 1960s and '70s influences. Singer Thomas Hall serves up some of the most exquisitely hazy vocals I've heard in a while. Check his sweetly cloud-headed delivery on the slide guitar-and-handclaps barroom rambler "Bring Out Your Dead" for further illumination. (Todd Lavoie)

Hollywood Nights with Stephen Jackson and Snoop Dogg

Bow-wow-wow-yippee-yo-yippee-yeah. Can I throw a "motherfucker" in there for good measure? To celebrate NBA star Stephen Jackson's birthday, rapper-actor Snoop Dogg is coming to the Mezzanine. Thanks to 14 albums, two top-selling pornos, a clothing label, a shoe brand, custom hot dogs, skateboards, scooters, 40 ozs, luggage, his own line of Cadillacs, signature gum, video games, and pet accessories, the rapper, producer, actor, and arbiter of all things izzle is blessed with more than just a catalog of party tunes. He's sure to offer a glimpse of what makes him an enduring industry in a form of music prone to artists with short expiration dates. (Miller)

Stereo Total

Fizzy Berlin-based mod-rockers Stereo Total presaged electroclash by a few years and many thousands of kilometers with their poker-faced 1995 romp through Salt-n-Pepa's "Push It." The Berlin-based collective's punk spirit and head-banging nod to supreme ironist Françoise Hardy also gave fans of then-of-oft-compared French counterparts Stereolab a little more swing and a lot less sphincter-clench. Now the Total has been whittled down to the duo of Françoise Cactus and Brezel Göring and its sublime Plastics ripoff "I Love You, Ono" is being used to shill Dell computers, but the subversive fun still reigns live and on the forthcoming EP Anti Love Song (Kill Rock Stars). Bedazzling openers Leslie and the Ly's are the patron saints of every hefty, sex-hungry, mom-jeaned, gem-sweatered outcast in indie-rap land, and they'll knock twice for Beyonce to prove it. (Marke B.)

Saviours

Oakland metal royalty Saviours' avalanche of sound is as heavy as the approaching summer nights are dangerous. Once trapped inside, you'll find it impossible to escape. Not that you'd want to — the band's prog-inflected brutality is getting faster and better as its impressive array of lion-manes grows longer. Vocalist Austin Barber hopscotches between epic doom metal low-ended bel-lows and a Lemmy snarl, giving those neck muscles — his and yours — a workout. Acid Mother's Temple

There's something inanely enjoyable about an Acid Mothers Temple freakout: ragged silk shirts, manes of long kinky black hair whipping around. Kawabata Makoto gives his guitar the full-on cliché virtuoso treatment. One moment it's an object of desire capable of intricacies and the next he's twirling it around by the neck, abusing it, slamming it on the floor, forgetting about it, and manipulating feedback from the patchcord instead. Such disrespect, and oh ... the may-

hem. With all this psychedelia going on, who's doing acid these days? You can't just have the sound without the feel, right? Somebody pass me a 10 strip! On second thought, this might not be the best show to try new things. (Andre Torrez)

Chronicle of a Summer

"Are you happy?" This is the question that guides filmmaker Jean Rouch and sociologist Edgar Morin's perspicacious auto-ethnography of Paris in 1960. Seizing on anthropology's capacity to make the familiar strange, the pair interviews a wide swath of Parisians, engaging their own interpretations on camera without the usual remove of a voice-over. Raoul Coutard's cinematography credit directly links the film to the emerging New Wave (he shot Breathless the same year), but Chronicle of a Summer's hand-held mode of inquiry is more attuned to the paradoxical nature of cinéma vérité than many of the films which borrowed its tools. Small Press Distribution's 40th Anniversary Blowout

Anyone who's logged and lugged their way through a bookstore clerkship has the sickening cyan letters of INGRAM tattooed forever on their retinas. That wholesale book distribution juggernaut may have fallen on hard times, but wee literary powerhouse Small Press Distribution of Berkeley is still going strong after 40 years. In 1969, Peter Howard and Joe Shoemaker started SPD to give lesser-known works, especially those by poets, political writers, and local young unknowns, a wider audience. Now the unique nonprofit represents more than 450 independent publishers. A party includes readings by Clark Coolidge, Norma Cole, Tennessee Reed, and Andrea Lopez, plus a chance to trade your poems for a free book. Poetry is the new money, honey. (Marke B.)

VISUAL ART

"Game Over/Continue?"

I like the moment in The Simpsons where Lisa's obsession with playing a video game obliterates her studious nature, and when opening up a Wind and the Willows-themed test, she hallucinates a frog saying "Game over, mate." The Giant Robot group show "Game Over/Continue?" drew a ton of people to its opening, and many of its delights, like Lisa's visions, are decidedly retro: get ready for some funny takes on Donkey Kong, Pac-Man, and Atari game systems. THE STORY "Revisiting the 1905 spiritualist book Thought Forms by Annie Besant and Charles Leadbeater, I present an updated group of visual thought forms. Composed primarily of graphite on paper, this precise and deliberate series is rooted in my interest in scientific illustration and the concomitant aesthetics of wonder: an old and constant human impulse to render the invisible visible."

Star follies: Kanye West's heart beats for Pro Tools; Madonna attempts to out-brood the Jolie-Pitts; Michael Jackson channels the undead; and the Jonas Brothers reveal their favorite brand of juice (hint: it ain't Capri Sun).

SONIC REDUCER Due to April 1 budget cuts, the original content in this space has been replaced by a selection of music news items from the wire.

KANYE WEST: 'YEAH, I HAVE AN AUTO-TUNE IMPLANT — SO WHAT?'

Eek! Online
NEW YORK CITY — "It's just another tool in the studio," hip-hop artist Kanye West said. "Now I don't even need to touch a computer to get my sound." Emboldened by the success of the operation, West's surgeons plan to remove a part of the G.O.O.D. Music founder's brain and install an entire suite of Pro Tools plug-ins.

MADONNA ADOPTING COUNTRY OF MALAWI

Rutters
LILONGWE — Madonna announced her plans to adopt the entire southern African nation today after local friends told her that her adopted Malawian children, David and Mercy James, were lonely and needed companionship. In 2006 some Malawian activists attempted to block David's adoption, but this time many are endorsing the idea of a high-flying life attached to a parent with a global pop brand. "We had no idea she would take her name so literally," opined a High Court clerk. "Nevertheless, I'm looking forward to meeting my nanny and hanging with the backstage crew at mom's next arena show."

MICHAEL JACKSON STARRING IN LATEST TWILIGHT INSTALLMENT

APE
LOS ANGELES — In a surprise move, Twilight heartthrob Robert Pattinson has been dropped from the lead role of vampire hottie Edward Cullen. His replacement: the King of Pop. Producers believe that despite his age and HIStory, Michael Jackson has the tween idol beat in the unnatural skin-palor department. "He's much more believable as a vampire," said one source.

CHRIS BROWN PICKED LAST FOR DANCING WITH THE STARS

FoxNews
LOS ANGELES — Just weeks

after Chris Brown was charged with felony assault, commercial endorsements were suspended, and his music withdrawn from radio stations, the Platinum recording artist took another backhand blow to his ego: he was snubbed by the entire cast of the popular TV show and picked last in a very special dancer's-choice episode. "Sure, the guy can cut a rug," said an unnamed contestant. "But everyone saw those unauthorized TMZ pics of his last cut-up partner. Performers always say, 'Break a leg.' I don't want to take that chance."

ALL-GIRL INDIE ROCK GROUP TAKE HAIR BAND EFFORT TO NEW LEVEL: WITH BEARDS

Ditchfork
PORTLAND, Ore. — As one of the most pervasive trends in indie rock, beards have stood the test of time and triple-blade, pivoting shavers. One all-girl combo, however, is proving that they can play that game too: this week the Portland-based Her Suit obtained beard transplants at the O'Hare Baldness Clinic outside Chicago. The number of friends on the band's MySpace page has risen tenfold, particularly among the foli-ally challenged.

JONAS BROTHERS BUSTED IN HUMAN ANTI-GROWTH HORMONE STING

EmptyV.com
WYCKOFF, N.J. — In an effort not to become Hanson or New Kids on the Block, Kevin, Nick, and Joe Jonas have been taking massive amounts of HAH in an effort to retain their tween demographic, allege Wyckoff police after a 4 a.m. raid on the Jonas family McMansion. "Our management told us we were taking flaxseed oil," Kevin said. "They claimed it was pixie dust," added Joe.

MP3S FOUND TO CAUSE CANCER, NEW VINYL FORMAT CONSIDERED 'ANTI-CARCINOGEN'

AFPEE
SAGINAW, Mich. — Scientists have determined a link between heavy use of iPods and other MP3 players and increased risk of cochlear cancer. The same team of scientists also determined a simple preventive measure: a protective vinyl coating applied to the actual MP3 players. "Vinyl is not only better," said one researcher. "It makes everything better." afpe

Tenor of the times: Peter Silberman on the Antlers spent a few years alone in Manhattan crafting Hospice, a self-released album that's generating waves of acclaim and the inevitable small backlash. PHOTO BY SAM DOYON

Deathly youth

A trip into the Antlers' Hospice

By Johnny Ray Huston
 > johnny@sfbg.com

A slow descent into a blasted-out void as intimate as it is alienated, the introductory track of the Antlers' self-released Hospice drops the listener into a sonic space somewhere near This Mortal Coil's 1984 It'll End in Tears (4AD). The reference point is a rich one. Jeff Buckley was given to covering It'll End in Tears' opening track, the Alex Chilton composition "Kangaroo," and when Antlers' singer-songwriter Peter Silberman's voice enters the scene on Hospice's next song, "Kettering," his fallen choir-boy high tenor is a polite echo of the drowned romantic Buckley, whose equally fatalistic father Tim wrote another one of It'll End in Tears' signature tracks. More blatantly, Hospice is an album all about this mortal coil, a recording that — as the title makes clear — lives near or within a threshold into death, alternately charting out or clawing at broken bonds.

Not exactly a light listening experience, which might be why Hospice is being greeted as everything from a work of genius (an NPR critic not only deemed it the best album so far this year, but better than anything from 2008) to an overrated angst fest (in the ever-reactive blogosphere, crankier reviewers have envisioned it as backdrop music for Scrubs and deemed it the musical form of Cymbalta). Another aspect of Hospice that triggers strong reactions is its back story, a tale of the now 23-year-old Silberman's extended creative isolation that's an urban version of the rural tortured artistry yarn attached to Bon Iver's acclaimed For Emma, Forever Ago (Jagjauwar, 2008).

To escape the growing chatter, it helps to engage directly with the music, itself far from devoid of cultural signposts. In crafting a 10-song cycle about life and love and death, Silberman draws heavily from the real-life stories and legends of Sylvia Plath and Ted Hughes; one gets the impression that he uses them as a loose-fitting cover for the skeletal remains of his own recent brush with mortality. At this point, Plath is a clichéd symbol of suicidal poeticism and youthful valorizing of depression. (I have memories of a fellow Guardian editor singing "You don't not do, you do not do" from "Lady Lazarus" in a mockery of her proper bell-like intonation during our Detroit days of being young.)

While Silberman's invocation of Plath's inconsolable rage and death-drive lacks humor, it isn't stiff or overly worshipful. He makes her spirit breathe only to quarrel with it. On the anti-lullaby "Bear," animal imagery gets a bleakly comic twist missing from the heavy-handed Hughes' favored bestial themes. The bottom line is that Silberman is a talented young singer-songwriter. Hospice is not only prodigious in its ambition, it is well-executed. The title of "Thirteen" reinvokes Chilton while the music's glacial-yet-golden shimmer could be a missing early Slowdive track or an outtake from Gregg Araki's 2004 film adaptation of Mysterious Skin. Like another "newgazer," Deerhunter's Bradford Cox, Silberman places the widescreen blurring soundscapes of late-1980s shoegaze bands in the service of American Gothic narrative impulses. In a perverse way, his odes to fatal anorexics and séances for long-dead writers offer the promise of great things to come. SFBG

PLAYLIST

► Afrobutt

Wonderbutt (Electric Minds)
 Humor is at play in these neo-disco tracks and their titles, which include "Urgent Workout Required," "Torro de Butt," "Morning Bump," "Cracks All Gone," and "Wunderbutt."

► Johan Agebjörn

featuring Lisa Barra, Mossebo (Lotuspike) Paging Vangelis; the songwriter and studio whiz behind Sally Shapiro goes new age.

► Blackbelt Andersen

Blackbelt Andersen (Full Pupp)
 Prins Thomas preps us for his vanilla-scented Lindström reunion with this one-man act from his fledgling label.

► Lô Borges

Lô Borges and Nuvem Cigana (EMI Brasil)
 It took me too long to realize all my favorite tracks on 1972's classic Clube de Esquina are written by Lô. The cover of Lô's debut album is perfection, and I am completely in love with Nuvem Cigana's "A força do vento," "Uma canção," "Viver viver," and O vento não me levou."

► Serge Gainsbourg

histoire de melody nelson (Light in the Attic)
 An appreciation of the recent reissue rainfall of Gainsbourg soundtracks and concept song cycles is overdue. For now, this is one of the best.

► The New Dawn

There's a New Dawn (Jackpot)
 Jackpot indeed — a lost ultra-collectible classic of '60s Northwest garage rock is revived, much like Jesus.

► Ofage

There's a New Dawn (Academy)
 "It's Not Easy" is kid soul at its finest, thanks especially to the singing of bandleader Melvin "Noks" Ukachi.

► Arthur Russell

...The Sleeping Bag Sessions (Sleeping Bag/Traffic)
 Koala power! Russell used the narcoleptic furry clasper as the logo for his dance music label. This comp presents some rare treats. His collaborations with Nicky Siano as Felix are two of the best.

► Stereo

Somewhere in the Night (Minimal Wave)
 This 1980s duo's criss-cross sunglasses put Kanye's venetian shades to shame. Minimal Wave delivers once again. (Huston)

Boobs.

Boobs!

By Joseph "DJ Daddy Huf'n Pufz" Wroblewski
 > superego@sfbg.com

ALTER EGO Yo, yo, yo waaaassuuuuppp in the Sheez Franheezy! It's me, DJ Daddy Huf'n Pufz, takin' over this Super Ego shit and giving you da club reals for reals! That sorry skinny faggot Marke B. had to go get his kneepads repadded or some shit — don't drop the soap on the 22, y'all — so I'm stepping in with the 411 in the 415 after dark. But first I gotta open a big ol' can of NO HOMO on this column, yo. You feel me, man? Fuck all that gay-ass gay and art school dropout shit B.'s always squealing like a little pink piggy about. I mean, I got four words to describe his nightlife problem: no boobs and no bottle service. And where the fuck's the VIP? All you "alternative" types need to drop the asshole attitude and those fucked-up granny outfits and get on the velvet rope tip. You ridin' with Big Daddy Joe now, and this is how we roll.

Rollin'! Dude, I just flew in from the Winter Music Conference in Miami (big ups!) with my partner Timmy "Turbo Iroc" Nguyen. He's that whack kind of Asian dude who tries to talk all hood and stuff, but then when you say, "Yo, what?" he gets all stiff and repeats it in English. Makes me bust a nut every time, cuz you know he talks Chinese or some crazy shit to his parents at home. Naw, he's cool, and this is why our set-up works: He gets me into all the Asian parties on 11th Street, and then I get him into all the white ones. Hey, I ain't racist!

Double the ladies, double the pleasure! I just got that tattooed with barbed wire and roses around my left bicep.

Anywheezy, da WMC. Fuck the music, you should have seen the fine-ass poolside "talent," dawg. Those chicks had plastic in all the right places — and they didn't just use it to cut up my lines, know what I'm saying? Lemmie tell you, they were all about the Big Daddy Pufz, the decks-wreckin' Romeo in wraparound Guccis. My Twitter was smokin'! Five or six of those hotties, two cans of body chocolate — throw in a sweet bag of leap and I got my first video, yo.

Back to the Yay — me and Turbo gonna throw on our sick-est Affliction tees, slick up our cuts, and make this a weekend the ladies will never forget, for serious, dude. Duuude. Dude!

Dude?

HOLLYWOOD NIGHTS

This muthafuckin' part-ay looks so off the ho-ho that they gotta to rewind it, back it up, and put on a triple "zz" at the end. Bay Area Breed Entertainment, your No. 1 Bay Area party connection, is pullin' it all out for NBA star, my man, Stephen Jackson on his big d-day — with a full-on, "up close and personal" performance by SNOOP DOGG himself!!!! Snoop! In. Da. Heyaaaaz! Yo, my Hummer just got a hummer. Woof! This slammin' yay-fair is an "exclusive celebrity birthday," co-hosted by Shaw Town, Next Level Events, Location415, Ankh Marketing, Deshawn Mitchell, and J.E. Media. Da best!!! No sportswear, tennis shoes, hats, or T-shirts. Keep it classy, y'all. Fri/3, 9 p.m., $20 advance. Mezzanine, 444 Jessie, SF. www.mezzaninesf.com

CHRISTIAN AUDIGIER HIGH FASHION CLOTHING EVENT

Not to be missed, party people! This exclusive luxury lifestyle event is all about living large. You know those way-dope hats, shirts, and bags with all the sparkly fancy writing on them that high-profile celebrities like Manny P., Colby O., Donnis, Jayde Nicole, like Taylor, Michael White, and the smokin' hot Ikki Twins wear? Fuck Ed Hardy, Christian Audigier's your man for the true L.A. look with UFC cred. Your host, my man, Boogie will be giving out thousands of dollars' worth of sophisticated Christian Audigier apparel at the one and only Boss 750 Luxury Lounge Nightclub. And the first 50 ladies get a free gift bag! Reserve your booth now, dawg — this one's gonna be hecka packed. Dress code strictly enforced, no baggy clothes or sports attire. Sat/3, 10 p.m., $20. Boss, 750 Harrison, SF. www.boss750.com

SAMANTHA RONSON

Yo, I don't get it, y'all. If you're gonna be a lesbo, why you gotta look like a punk rock dude? I like the lesbians with the big racks and long-ass fingernails on the porno who get down in the hot tub with the whipped cream. Warm it up, ladies! Yeah. Just don't try to compete with me and my boys in the satisfaction department, fo' rock 'n' reals. Ain't nothing like a real man's loving. You with me, fellas? Knock 'em back. Boom. This man-chick Ronson may use that Lohan hottie as a muff-warmer, but a girl behind the "wheels of steel" trying to spin like a real DJ? What to the what-what? If she shares out some Lindsay, though, I may let her sing a verse on my forthcoming album, Bay Up or Shut Up, Bitchz. Drop date: May 15 on Rock Star Energy Drink Records. Pier Paolo

» PREVIEW Though not as well known as contemporaneous post-punk politicos Gang of Four and Scritti Politti, Milanese quintet Pier Paolo produced a trio of wildly experimental EPs in the late 1970s that refuse to assimilate to faddish rock historiographies. Avanti (Rabbit's Moon, 1978) and Naked City (Dérive, 1978) shadow Gramsci-inspired lyrical denouements with febrile musical leitmotifs that seem to dissolve as soon as they are discerned. Putting to shame Factory Records' later situationist-ripping tactic of sheathing 12-inch singles in sandpaper, they even released one single as a 78 rpm wrapped in pages from Cuir magazine. Pier Paolo has long known how to cultivate an enigmatic image, right down to posing for their own photos. The group's central innovation — a split-screen approach to rhythm and textural ambience, set astride by Gérard Lebovici's dry production — may not sound like much on paper, but the double-drummer chaos suggests what would have happened if the Talking Heads and Brian Eno had pushed past bourgeois niceties. The band's unmatched achievement is Abjection (NoNo, 1979), a mutant mix of millennial dub, soft-hewn minimalism, and verses cribbed from The Society of the Spectacle. Thirty years later, Pier Paolo is making its first state-side appearances, and the shows promise to be a bold redress of the usual reunion tactics. (Max Goldberg)

Kayhan Kalhor

» PREVIEW Kayhan Kalhor's splendid vehicle is the kamanche, a bowed string instrument often rendered in English as a "spike fiddle." Don't be fooled by that bit of orientalism. Neither folksy nor punk, in Kalhor's hands, the kamanche sings an eloquent and breathless tune, as assured and unfaltering as an operatic coloratura. Partnered with the rich and flawlessly clear string-tugging of the charismatic Brooklyn Rider string quartet, Kalhor's vocabulary of Persian classical music and Kurdish folk melody soars, now with the rush of a high speed chase, now with wrenching pathos that would move a heart of stone. Presenter SFJazz has dubbed the genre "world chill," and I would urge you to ignore it. What is world? What is chill? Both the youthful Brooklyn Rider and the seasoned Kalhoun perform in fiery earnest, with scarcely a glance at any East-meets-West gimmickry. Still, without burdening these fine players with the shlockiness of a term like "world chill" or "crossover classical," it's fair to say this pairing builds shrewdly on the success of projects like Yo-Yo Ma's intercultural Silk Road Ensemble and Kronos Quartet's record Caravan, (Nonesuch, 2000) which featured Kalhor's grandly titled composition Gallop of a Thousand Horses. As that name suggests, when alumni of the European symphonic tradition and virtuosos like Kalhor jam out, there's no fear of the epic. Watching this group feels like surrendering to the pleasures of a sweeping cinematic journey. And I watched it on YouTube — the Palace of Fine Arts will be the silver screen. (Dina Maccabee)

The U.S. landscape is vulnerable to twisters and tattooed by mankind in the photography of San Francisco's Baum Award winner Sean McFarland, who makes use of collage to create images of primal dreamlike potency.

Stormy weather

Sean McFarland blends photography and collage to picture us

 > johnny@sfbg.com

It's a pleasure to see Sean McFarland receive the Baum Award for Emerging American Photographers. Last August, McFarland was one of the eight artists or groups showcased in the Bay Guardian's second annual photo issue. The Baum Award is a national honor designated for photographers at a pivotal point in their development, and in McFarland's case, that development is the opposite of predictable. While many photographers work toward "dazzle 'em" displays of technical virtuosity, McFarland has moved away from earlier saturated digital color images toward simple Polaroid photos that possess ominous allure.

Did I say simple? McFarland's dreamlike images of weather and landscapes are only simple in appearance — they require subtle combinations of photography and the increasingly popular practice of found-image collage. In terms of subject matter, they personalize and miniaturize the vast and unsettling images of the semi-settled West present in the camera art of Michael Light, David Maisel, and Trevor Paglen. The title of Lindsay White's current show at Ping Pong Gallery, "A Field Guide to the Atmosphere," might just as well apply to McFarland's work. The atmosphere is stormy, and as troubling as it is beguiling.

SFBG In the last year or two, your work has shifted away from urban views to elemental images: sky, sea, vast land. What has set you off in that direction?

Sean McFarland I've been thinking a lot about the ways in which the earth changes. In an urban environment, we build buildings, roads, and parks, changing the landscape. These are immediate and obvious alterations of our environment. Our actions also change the landscape as we alter the climate — more frequent and powerful storms, rising seas. By focusing on making images of the natural world, of the landscape, I'm interested in making pictures of us. How we change the earth and how the earth effects us.

SFBG Your work from the earlier 2005 era reminds me a bit of a short film, site specific_Las Vegas 05, by an artist named Olivo Barbieri. It has amazing colorful aerial views of Las Vegas in which the city really looks like it is comprised of toy buildings and cars. Were you looking for that kind of "making strange" effect when presenting views some might take for granted?

SM The work I was making from 1999 until around 2002 tried to take things that were fake and make them look real. When I first started re-photographing the collages I was making (in 2003), the miniaturization effect was an unexpected but welcome result. I was working in the other direction, making the real look fake. The collages are made by hand, so the edges are rough and messy. The selective blurring of images was there at first to hide where the images were put together, but it was that transformative quality of the focus that made the process intriguing to me. With the collaged images, I was taking pictures from all over, real images of real things, and by bringing those disparate elements together, the pictures raise questions about what was actually in the photograph.

The image of the park (in the Guardian's August 2008 Photo Issue), for example, has the playground from Dolores Park, but with the downtown skyline and bridge removed and replaced with a sky from another city. It may be the absence of the urban center normally in the background that makes the picture seem odd, or it could be that the light from the sky is not the same reflecting off the foreground. The relationship between fact and fiction is one of the strongest reasons I work with photography as opposed to other visual art forms.

SFBG You mention collage as a part of your process. That might not be so apparent to someone who casually glances at your photography. Can you tell me a bit about your approach to collage, and also if there are any collage artists whom you especially like?

SM Lately I've been working to make the collage process less apparent. In the past, the images took the final form of a C-Print, made in a darkroom. Now I'm using Polaroid film. Polaroids are mementos and souvenirs of moments, places, and things that actually happened; they imply that whatever is in the picture was witnessed, was real. Since I can't really take the images I'm making, I'm using collage to do so. A good example is my image of the airplane flying over the black ocean and white land. The picture of the plane is taken from a satellite image of Earth, the land is a photograph I made in the Exploratorium (it's a picture of an exhibit that shows how land is changed by wind currents).

SFBG Books are a big visual inspiration to me, so I liked seeing you cite the Field Guide to North American Weather and Gerhard Richter's Atlas as two recent sources of fascination and perhaps material. What drew you to those books and what do you like about them?

SM I enjoy those books because they are both wonderful collections. I work from an archive of several thousand images. This is probably why Atlas is so fascinating to me. It's the source material (mostly photographs) that Richter uses in his work and it made me even more interested in his work. I like the Field Guide because all the pictures in it are of weather-based natural phenomena. Some of the photographs in it are pretty hard to believe, but actually happened. SFBG

Sam I am?

Charlie Varon examines Jewish identity in the 21st century

By Robert Avila

> a8celetters@sfbg.com

He has come, he says, to take American Jewry into the 21st century. Some members of the suburban synagogue that just hired Sam Isaac, charismatic tax attorney and single father turned rabble-rousing rabbi and spiritual visionary, are thrilled. Others, not so much. Between those two poles, and across 12 fully fledged characters, solo performer extraordinaire Charlie Varon takes us on a steadily dramatic, extremely witty, and thought-provoking ride through what he pictures as a transformative moment in Jewish identity. And transformation is what Rabbi Sam — who calls the United States the most Jewish of countries and likes to draw on Lincoln as much as that other Abraham — represents.

No doubt a little shaking up was needed at the synagogue where, as Sam reminds his audience, the young have been drifting away from the religion of their parents, and where for too long the others have gotten by on hollow nostalgia ("museum Judaism" he calls it, "with just a pinch of that shtetl kitsch"). But Rabbi Sam is as determined as he is brilliantly inspired, and with the board of directors split passionately down the middle about him, a showdown looks all but inevitable.

The crux of the matter becomes Sam's vaguely suspicious management of an anonymous donor's gift of $2 million, intended specifically to take Jews, and even willing gentiles in the community, on a trip to Jerusalem for a "jolt" of Judaism straight from the Holy Land that will supposedly, under Sam's tutelage, help take American Judaism out of the past and reinvent it for the future. Slowly, as this project meets resistance from certain crotchety but not unsympathetic quarters, Sam becomes a more ambiguous figure, his embrace of certain influential members of the community beginning to smack of manipulation, his supreme confidence giving off a whiff of megalomania.

Varon's multicharacter solo show — the first in years from the famed creator of such theatrical gems as Rush Limbaugh in Night School, in ongoing partnership with collaborator and director David Ford — is a performance tour de force, propelling a story both compellingly nuanced and suspenseful. At the same time, and despite its dozen diverse characters and muscular wrestling with the scope of Jewish identity at the beginning of a new century, there is something of a conspicuous absence at the heart of the play, especially given the centrality of Sam's Jerusalem venture, which is Judaism and America's inevitable entanglement in the ongoing and escalating catastrophe unfolding, disproportionately, for Palestinians and Jews in Israel-Palestine.

Even if it goes unstated in the play — which may simply and understandably be trying to avoid opening a can of worms, thematically speaking — it will probably strike at least some members of the audience that Jerusalem is technically an occupied city, not, therefore, open to all, but rather a principal site of contestation.

Again, it is not hard to imagine Varon and Ford wanting to skip the issue for wholly practical reasons, as an almost uncontrollable distraction from the play's wider concerns. But can it really be avoided? The modern history of Israel and the Israel-Palestine conflict surely has, at the very least, implications for the play's theme: the nature of Jewish identity in the United States today, a conundrum that American Jewish individuals and groups consciously underscore, for example, by their vocal presence at the forefront of recent nationwide protests against the U.S.-backed Israeli military incursions into Gaza. Silence on this pressing context does not banish it from the consciousness of the audience. Rather, it risks becoming, however inadvertently, a misleading gesture of its own. BFG

SOMETHING ABNORMAL IS HAPPENING
It comes as no surprise that this Iran native got her start fabricating sculpture for HBO's "Six Feet Under." A sculptor and installation artist, Fabian creates forms that mimic or hint at organic growths, working with atypical materials such as tape, glue, medical supplies and blinds. Often resembling organs or tumors, Fabian's work is seductively grotesque, tactile, beautiful and playful. Presented with KQED.

John Jasperse Company

PREVIEW When New York choreographer John Jasperse presented his company in its local debut in 2004, the severe and pared-down choreography of his multimedia piece California looked more New England Puritanism than California hedonism. Good for him, I remember thinking, for not having bought into popular stereotypes. Still the omnipresent leaf blower and the dancers' self-involvement needed me. No such hint of a cultural disconnect is likely to trouble his Misuse liable to prosecution, which takes its name from the milk crates we use to store and move our belongings. The work includes a live score by Mills College composer Zeena Parkins and a found-objects design for which YBCA has sent out a call for plastic coat hangers. One wonders: when Jasperse, who has been choreographing for more than 20 years, created Misuse in 2007 and set a zero budget for design, did he have an inkling for the rough waters the country was about to enter? In retrospect, the decision has proven visionary. Misuse's original impetus came from a desire to hold up a mirror to a society in which Judge Judy makes more money than all nine of the Supreme Court justices combined, or in which the war in Iraq costs more than four times per day than the annual budget for the National Endowment for the Arts. No doubt, if Jasperse made Misuse today, he could come with other horror figures picked straight from the headlines. But ultimately more important than the topical resonance of this work is the integrity and refinement of Jasperse's choreography — which is his own, yet made for us. (Rita Felciano)

Audacious Artefacts: Parisian Grand Guignol Hypnondrome, 515 10th St.; 1-800-838-3006. www.brownpaperickets.com. $15-69. Thurs-Sat, 8pm. Through May 2. Over the years the Thrillpeddlers have dabbled in the diabolic on many levels — from the creepy sci-fi inspired vignette A Slight Tinging to the elementally claustrophobic terror of Orgy in the Lighthouse. This spring's lineup of old Parisian Grand Guignol goodies gleefully floats an array of human phobias old and new: from dikephobia (fear of justice) to dellobphobia (fear of leeches) to a perhaps hitherto undiscovered phobia, the fear of low shadow puppetry. The Thrillpeddlers have always delighted in exploring the uncomfortable, the unconventional, and the flat-out impossible, alternating as tradition demands between tales of terror and comic sex farces, and this year they get down and dirty as prostitutes, lecherous country gentry, amoral jungle guides, and naughty nuns sink and prance across the stage in various states of undress and unprincipled behavior. In Tics, a hysterically-paced evening of wife-swapping between expansively sleazy Doctor Martin (Eric Tyson Wertz) and his high-strung dinner guest Monsieur de Merliot (TJ Buswell) results in a veritable onslaught of unfortunate physical reactions, while the cruel fate which befalls possibly perky radiesthesialist Eveline Ricard (Maria Leigh) in the 1958 adventure thriller The Head Hunters hears back to the titillating exploitation plots found in vintage men's magazines. The night ends with an erotic take on the Thrillpeddlers patented shockshow which honestly provokes more laughs than shrieks (or moans), but hey, laughter is sexy too! (Gluckstein)

Does This Piano Make My Ass Look Big? Mama Calizo's Voice Factory, 1519 Mission; 1-800-838-3006. $15-20. Fri/3-Sat/4, 8pm; Sun/5, 2pm. Through April 5. Kitten can play, and sure does, in this frisky first solo outing by Suzanne "Kitten on the Keys" Ramsey, courtesy of Mama Calizo's Voice Factory. Needless to say, this means more than a piano. After a brief and tangy video introduction by the Almighty (Miss Rodney Austin), Ramsey greets her audience with a brashly kittenish bravado, assuming the character of a reclusive but vivacious suburban tween-plus, dressed second-hand fabulous and plopped down like a combination Betty Davis and Little Miss Muffet, amid a girly bedspread splattered pink and cuddly, beneath a picture of Elton John (whom she dreams of marrying) and Freddie Mercury (to whom she once enthusiastically offered herself back stage — yeah, pretty unsuccessfully). What follows are a somewhat desultory but consistently amusing new acts buoyed by a series of perky and naughty original songs, some bold audience repartee, a couple more amusing video segments, and accompanying costume changes. It could have used a stronger directorial hand (Ramsey handles direction, with co-direction credit going to Dwayne Calizo), but then again, you certainly wouldn't want to work out all the kinks from this show, which as it manages to be nicely bawdy, silly, sexy, and generally sacrilegious. Will End's Thom Pain (based on nothing) is an aggressively funny, coolly incontinent piece of theater terrorism now up in a laser-focused, captivating production from Cutting Ball Theater. Bay Area audiences were introduced to End's blazing wit and word play last year in Berkeley Rep's local premiere of Tragedy: A Tragedy, but Thom Pain, a tortuous and wonderfully hostile-hospitable monologue, achieves a kind of ideal setting and performance in this intimate production executed to the hilt by a very impressive Jonathan Bock, under admirable direction by Marissa Wolf. "Exploratorium After Dark"

PREVIEW We all know it's fun to be kissed in the dark, especially when Nina Simone is singing about it. But is science more fun in the dark, too? The new series "Exploratorium After Dark" is out to make the case for a yes, and their experiment includes cocktails. Under the theme of sideshow science, the April 16 installment promises a trained goldfish act and mutant hijinks from Madam Yu and the Beautiful and Strange Hermaphrodite Planaria. Apparently Planaria can take at least 237 forms — roughly the same number of looks Heklina managed over the years at Trannyshack. That same night also includes a variety of classic carnival wonders, such as levitation demonstrations and rooms of melty mirrors. This week's kickoff installment brings a performance from DBR (a.k.a. Daniel Bernard Romain), his first gig a few days after an appearance on American Idol. Will he survive that Dante-esque experience? Find out as he collaborates with the aptly-named DJ Scientific, Elan Vytal. (Johnny Ray Huston)

Eric Drooker aims a Slingshot at capitalist propaganda

By Ben Terrall
▷ a&cletters@sfbg.com

I met Eric Drooker when we were both callow teens experiencing the joys of a coed Quaker socialist hippie camp in Vermont.

We skinny-dipped, which was part of the camp's official policy, and smoked pot, which wasn't. Drooker has lived in the Bay Area since the mid-1990s, but his art is closely associated with New York City. A lanky, laconic man in his late 40s, he was born and raised in Manhattan, and the city still dominates his imagery. This is true of his wordless graphic novel Flood: A Novel in Pictures (Dark Horse), which won an American Book Award in 1993. It also applies to the haunting silent ballad Blood Song (Harvest Books), published in 2002.

Yet Drooker is perhaps best known for oil paintings that grace covers of The New Yorker — in early September last year, his 15th cover for the magazine appeared on newsstands. Some of these paintings are also included in 2006's Illuminated Poems (Running Press), which pairs his art with writing by the late Allen Ginsberg. Most recently Drooker published a book of postcards titled Slingshot (PM Press, 68 pages, $14.05). It consists of 32 images created with razor blade on scratchboard.

Drooker's studio is located in a downtown Berkeley office building, not far from where he lives with his long-time partner. When I come by for an interview, work in progress, mostly figure studies, is in evidence on an easel and tacked to the walls. I ask him what is different about Slingshot. "I've always pushed publishers I've worked with in the past to use recycled paper and soy inks, but PM Press is the first outfit that actually took that request seriously," he says. "When they first approached me, I dug the fact that they were local, and printed their books right here in Oakland — not China."

Drooker's work is widely disseminated in leftist circles, at times in ways that make the idea of a body politic quite literal — the PM Press Web site notes that his art is "plastered on brick walls from New York to Berlin, tattooed on bodies from Kansas to Mexico City." He's largely bypassed the more lucrative realm of art galleries, while allowing activists to access and use (via www.drooker.com) his images free. "I enjoy working on diverse projects that will be seen by a cross-section of the public — not just the gallery-goers," he says.

The grandson of lower East Side socialists, Drooker was born at the tail end of the post-World War II baby boom. As a teenager, he began participating in progressive politics on a neighborhood level. Early influences on his artistic style included the woodcut novels of Frans Masereel and Lynd Ward and the underground comics of Robert Crumb. During his time in Manhattan, Drooker was active in the late-1980s struggles against gentrification, and in countless anti-war campaigns. Many of the images on display at www.drooker.com stem from those political battles.

Today, he believes his hometown has "become inhospitable" to anyone other than the wealthy. "It's not even a city for the middle class anymore," he says. "Unless you have big money, the message is: don't show up."

Nonetheless, Drooker still dreams about New York: "It wasn't until I moved away from Manhattan that I became more obsessed with it, and started to really appreciate its significance." He calls Manhattan "the archetypal city," and admits that its infrastructure continues to fascinate him. This quality is apparent in the meticulously detailed attention that his work pays to water towers on rooftops, subway tunnel walls, and myriad types of urban pedestrians.

As a youth, Drooker spent many hours watching vintage cartoons. His sense of humor sometimes betrays a still-evident love for Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck. He also haunted New York's repertory movie houses in the 1970s, where he watched films made by the era's anti-Hollywood rebels, and giants of international cinema such as Akira Kurosawa, Luis Buñuel, and Federico Fellini. Given that much of this impressively prolific artist's longer form work has the narrative feel of both classic animation and the silent films of Charlie Chaplin, it isn't surprising to learn that he's been collaborating with an SF animation studio on an animation project for the last year.

Given Drooker's decades of political engagement, it's no surprise that he's opinionated about the political challenges artists face today, from economic instability and increasing gaps between rich and poor to global war and global warming. He cites Sue Coe ("amazing, hard-hitting") and Seth Tobocman as two favorite peers. Drooker is a long-time contributor to World War 3 Illustrated, the comics collection Tobocman cofounded in 1980. He has a new piece in the next issue, due soon.

Drooker maintains that the most common contemporary political art is "right wing": namely, advertising imagery, a form he considers "as much propaganda as any mural Diego Rivera did." He says he sympathizes with people who produce commercial art to keep their families fed, but that the work is "selling you this myth of consumer culture: 'Buy this and maybe you won't feel so bad.'"

"We're surrounded by political art wherever we turn," he added during a follow-up e-mail discussion. "Advertising art is ubiquitous, it grabs us by our emotions — as all art does — and tries to sell us things. Its aesthetics are powerful, and its politics are clear. The mural-sized billboards in our public spaces were all created by artists who went to art school. What is the political message? Faith in consumerism. Until the Renaissance, artists were employed by the church. What was the message of medieval religious art? Fear god. Worship a Jewish guy being tortured to death on a cross. Obey the Vatican — or else." SFBG

HALLIBURTON'S ARMY:
HOW A WELL-CONNECTED TEXAS
OIL COMPANY REVOLUTIONIZED
THE WAY AMERICA MAKES WAR

By Prapat Chatterjee
Nation Books
304 pages
$26.95

Prapat Chatterjee, director of CorpWatch, a dogged, effective monitor of corporate malfeasance, has a long track record as a muck-raking journalist. The dirt he uncovers on Dick Cheney and Donald Rumsfeld's favorite company in Halliburton's Army could help provide grounds for an interesting, and gratifying, series of court cases.

The "army" of the title is staffed with Asians and other workers of color paid scanty wages to toil at crappy jobs once performed by U.S. soldiers. Chatterjee argues that this contracting has made U.S. warfare cheaper by allowing the Pentagon to spend fewer dollars training troops. The workers on the bottom of the ladder aren't getting much, while "cost-plus" and no-bid contracts, price-gouging, and kickbacks have shoveled tens of millions Halliburton's way. A whistleblower involved in an audit that she discovered was really a cover-up estimated that the cost of supporting Halliburton/KBR managers in Kuwait City was $73 million per year. To quote Rep. Henry Waxman (D-Los Angeles) within the book, when the Army outsources "this much work on contract management, they really are outsourcing oversight."

Chatterjee, author of 2004's Iraq, Inc.: A Profitable Occupation, pulls together a vast amount of information (much of it gathered from trips as a reporter in Iraq and Dubai, where Halliburton moved for sunnier tax climes). At times it threatens to overwhelm his narrative. Harried publishing in tight economic times may be the reason for an excess of subsections with different typefaces — given the impressive reportage, the overall presentation is a bit jumbled. Nonetheless, Halliburton's Army is an important resource. (Ben Terrall)

The city and the grillers

By Paul Reidinger
 > paulr@sfbg.com

At this moment — at the cusp of spring — the most happening restaurant in Noe Valley is Contigo, which opened early in March in what had been a computer store. The crowd promptly swooped, with a thickness and intensity not seen in the neighborhood since the launch of Fresca nearly four years ago and without, it seems, much in the way of worries about the economic meltdown. You step into Contigo, find yourself against a wall of chattering people, and step out. You step around the corner to City Grill and breathe more easily.

City Grill is the good new restaurant in Noe Valley no one has heard of. It opened in January in what had been the Kookeez space (before that, Miss Millie's, and before that, Meat Market café) just a few steps away from Lupa. The owner of Lupa, Stefano Coppola, also has a hand in City Grill — but there the similarities between the two places end. Lupa serves Roman-influenced food, while City Grill is a kind of nouvelle American diner whose nearest culinary relation is probably Firefly, just a few blocks up the street.

The word "grill" makes me think of a place that serves grilled-cheese sandwiches and bitter coffee, while "city grill" makes me think of some shiny, clattery spot downtown where politicians meet at lunchtime to eat steak and hatch plots. City Grill is neither; it is, instead, a wonderfully woody neighborhood restaurant that manages to preserve much of the past while offering excellent, modern food. I'd like to add "at modest prices," but perhaps price perception carries an element of relativity. City Grill is about equidistant from cheap and fancy. You can pay quite a bit more and not do much better, and you can also pay quite a bit less and not do much worse.

At least one welcome change from the Kookeez regime is that the kid-proofed menus, laminated in plastic as at innumerable chain restaurants along the limitless interstates, are gone. City Grill is kid-friendly but doesn't go overboard about it. The space's most unusual feature, from a visual or aesthetic point of view, is the exhibition kitchen, which is in the front third of the restaurant — where you might expect to find the bar — rather than (as is more usual) in or at the rear. Since the kitchen bulges out into the dining space and is a beehive of constant activity, the diner's sense is of being in the audience at some sort of theater in the round, or near-round. Most of the tables and booths have some view of the animated troupe working the kitchen.

As to what emerges from the kitchen: it's good stuff, and this isn't surprising, given the quality of Coppola's nearby Lupa. Coppola has somehow managed to bring an Italian ethic of simplicity and straightforwardness to City Grill's Cal-American menu. Each dish tends to emphasize a single, principal ingredient, with additions and amendments deployed sparingly and quietly.

A broccoli soup ($6.50), for example, struck us as just broccoli in another form, puréed with some chicken stock, thickened with a bit of potato, and given a bit of tangy crunch by scatterings of croutons and Parmesan cheese. A bowl of mussels and frites ($9.50), meanwhile, was about as disciplined as it gets, with fat Prince Edward Island shellfish topped with a stack of golden fries and a sauce of white wine, garlic, butter, and streamers of tarragon for a bouillabaisse-like hint of licorice. Since we ran out of fries long before the liquid had been sopped up, we asked for a basket of bread. Odd that such a basket hadn't been brought when we were seated — is this a new way for restaurants to cut back discreetly? — but the bread itself (French, not sourdough) was wonderfully soft and warm, and when we ran through the first basket, we were brought another.

Lamb chops ($24.50) — really a rack of lamb, with each rib bone carefully frenched) — were rubbed with herbs and roasted to the rare side of medium-rare, then plated with a whirl of well-seasoned, creamy mashed potatoes, a thicket of wilted broccoli rabe, and several mysterious, leathery hemispheres we guessed might be dried, pitted cherries.

A more fanciful preparation was a plate of pork medallions ($16) — a trio of what I took to be slices of roasted loin, each arrayed in a haybed of sauerkraut on a platform of russet potato. These layerings were set on the plate pointing outward, like the petals of a flower, while around the edges a country-mustard sauce had been napped. It all seemed naggingly familiar, but I couldn't quite put my finger on it until I was halfway through: it was a rethinking of choucroute, the warming — and highly sustaining — dish of Alsace.

Then on to Vienna for some strudel ($6) — apple, of course, studded with raisins and topped with a scoop or two of ice cream (for a buck extra per scoop). Strudel is the ultimate pastry experience of Mittleuropa, but it was brought (along with coffee) by the Turks and is a version of phyllo, like its Middle Eastern cousin baklava. City Grill's strudel is golden and puffy and could stand on its own without any fruit or ice cream, just a bit of butter and a sprinkle of powdered sugar. Maybe a splash of coffee, or espresso, to wash it down. No matter how American we are, the world is always with us. SFBG

CHEAP EATS Hardly anyone names their cat Dave.

In fact, no one.

That I know of.

And yet, every 11

years, like clock-

work or a comet,

I find myself in the position of having to explain Lou Reed to someone. Why this task falls to me, I will never know. I am not in particular a fan, although I do like and sometimes love and generally "get" and occasionally even listen to Lou Reed.

On the other hand I have never enjoyed hearing Bob Dylan sing a Bob Dylan song. Somebody else — pretty much anybody else singing a Bob Dylan song ... sure! On the radio the other day they were talking about whether or not white guys could be "hip," and the name that kept coming up was Bob Dylan. Someone mentioned Tom Waits, and Tom Waits mentioned Chuck E. Wise, and somebody said Quentin Tarantino and the whole time I was screaming at my radio and shaking it, because that's the way I am.

I am exactly the kind of person who would name their cat Dave. As it happens, my cat came with a name already: Weirdo the Cat. But if I ever get the chance to name another one ... Dave! Dave the Cat.

Now, if I ever get to name a person, humanity's going to be in serious trouble. As is that person, Bing. Boy or girl. After the coolest white man that ever lived. I'm not old enough to even know, really, but then, most people who think Jesus was cool never actually jammed with Him, or heard or saw anything He said or did first hand, or even watched His television special — except on South Park. And that's animated.

My point being that I'm done with dating (again!), or at least writing about it, and so now you get to read about food, lucky you.

Eats. Cheap, yes, but gourmet? Not that making sense is my specialty, but why would you name your restaurant Eats and then describe it as a "gourmet breakfast and lunch restaurant"?

It's not gourmet. It's Eats. Clement and Second Avenue. Just look for the line of people waiting on the sidewalk. You'll never guess what they're waiting for: eggs. Toast. You know, potatoes ... Eats has the standardest menu on Clement. Nothing's special, not even the specials. Huevos rancheros? Yeah, special maybe in Iowa. But I ask you, Eats, is this Iowa? No.

Wait, I made a mistake. This is Iowa. Naw, there is one thing special on the menu. It's the ricotta cheese pancakes! I found out not by sampling them, but by going to Yelp.com. Which is how I plan to review restaurants from now on. Who knew? There are 134 reviews of Eats on Yelp, and almost all of them mention the specialness of the ricotta cheese pancakes.

Hmm ... 134 people versus me. I don't know about you, but I would trust 134 voices over the evidence of my own senses. Especially since, out of any random 134 people, somewhere between 130 and 133 of them are likely to know more about food than I do.

I am a fan of cornmeal pancakes, and pancake pancakes. Word on the Web is that ricotta cheese is the way to go. They're so good, apparently, you don't need butter or syrup. (Many, many, many people said this.) I say: why in the wide, wonky world would I order pancakes except as a vehicle for butter and syrup?

In fact, I ordered the cornmeal pancakes, short stack, with a side of sausage. They gave me three cakes, and only two packets of butter. What the — ? I had to go find four more for myself, 'cause the service was kind of slow. The grill-friends I was with, they ordered cornmeal and regular pancakes. And we all agreed: ho-diddly-hum.

The sausage was dry.

And seriously: it may be that the ricotta cheese pancakes are as amazing as 134 people say, but my guess is they're not. If they were, the cornmeal and regular ones would be at least be good, one would think. afbg

Imprisoned Irish Republican Army member Bobby Sands (Michael Fassbender, who lost nearly 40 pounds for the role) starves for his political convictions in Steve McQueen's Hunger. Visceral reality

Art and horror converge in Hunger

By Dennis Harvey
 > a&cletters@sfbg.com

Already a veteran Irish Republican Army volunteer serving his second penitentiary term at age 27, Bobby Sands was leader of Republican prisoners at HM Prison Maze, a.k.a. Long Kesh, outside Belfast in 1981. Early that year he commenced a hunger strike joined by numerous other inmates, an action intended to define IRA incarcerates as political rather than criminal prisoners while boosting international attention for the independence cause.

After 66 days, he was the first of 10 participants to die. The strike's cessation five months later (participants joined in at staggered intervals) was claimed as a victory by Conservative P.M. Margaret Thatcher and the mainstream British press. Yet the inmates won most of their demands, IRA membership surged, and the "Iron Lady" was thereafter target No. 1 for patriotic loathing among Irish free-staters.

Hunger is the first feature by Steve McQueen, the London photographer, sculptor, and maker of often black and white shorts created primarily for the more rarefied atmosphere of museums and galleries. Their minimalist rigor is very much present here in the exactitude of composition as well as their emphasis on physical detail and visceral experience. It took Julian Schnabel until The Diving Bell and the Butterfly (2007) to find a full-length subject that suited his tactile sense while excusing a lack of narrative instinct or interest; McQueen's got there on the first try. Hunger is completely realized, without compromise. It's convincingly ugly in an aesthetically beautiful way, cool to the touch, admirably near-perfect, and off-putting.

We're introduced to Sands only after several lesser figures take brief center stage: Raymond Lohan (Stuart Graham), a guard whose work weighs heavily on him; new prisoner Davey (Brian Milligan), who refuses to wear "the uniform of a criminal," thus joining the already in-progress "blanket protest"; and older cellmate Gerry (Liam McMahon), who introduces him to the "dirty protest." That protest consisted of caking walls with smeared feces, directing urine into the corridor, and letting uneaten food rot. We finally glimpse Sands (Michael Fassbender) during visiting hours; he puts up a fierce fight as he and others are violently dragged to a forced shave-and-wash.

Hunger is clinical, politically neutral, almost purely observational — interested in simply displaying rather than commenting on the sacrifices made. It's not unlike McQueen's series of postage stamps commemorating British soldiers killed in Iraq — created as part of his role as "official war artist" — that were opposed by the Royal Mail and Ministry of Defense.

Ethical debate is limited to one, 17-and-a-half minute shot in which Bobby and Father Moran (Liam Cunningham) lay out personal, political, and religious arguments for and against a potentially lethal strike. It's only in the subsequent, equally stock-still sequence — a guard sweeping an entire hall-length of piss — that the director's severity risks feeling schematic.

Needless to say, the final act is unrelenting, with its hallucinations, open sores, and actors starved under medical supervision to scarifying effect. But McQueen finds unsentimental poetry in surprising places throughout, from the snowflakes falling on Lohan's beating-scarred knuckles to Sands' lifeless face as a winding sheet is drawn over it. The institutional palette, bare-bones use of sound, even the fully exposed sinewy-to-sticklike male bodies turn docudrama into a kind of exquisite art project, at once devastating and hermetically sealed. SFBG

HUNGER opens Fri/3 in Bay Area theaters.

GO INTO THE LIGHT: TONY CONRAD'S FLICKERING CINEMA

In an online interview, experimental filmmaker and violin drone pioneer Tony Conrad relates a story: one night, underground drag superstar Mario Montez wandered into the apartment Conrad shared with filmmaker Jack Smith, and at Smith's behest began an impromptu performance. When Smith flicked on a beaten up 16mm projector to serve as a makeshift spotlight, he and Conrad became transfixed by the play of light that reflected off Montez's sequined outfit. While it would be glib — and certainly fun — to declare that 1960s structural film was born from the glittering gyrations of a drag queen, Conrad's anecdote is but one development in his longstanding fascination with the excessive sensory effects of shooting light out into the void. Conrad's 1965 16mm film The Flicker is perhaps his purest and best-known manifestation of this — 30 minutes of black and white stroboscopic bliss (or hell) that cast its long shadows over Brian Gysin's dream machines, and more contemporarily, Anthony McCall's striking digital light and fog projections. You'll have the chance to see how much flashing light your eyes can take when San Francisco Cinematheque presents screenings of Conrad's films in conjunction with the New York-based polymath's weekend-long residency at the concurrent Activating the Medium Festival. While Sunday night's program features The Flicker, it also puts it into context as a jumping off point for Conrad's subsequent process-based films and public access video works, in which activities such as electrocution and cooking take on a rhythm as mesmerizing as staring into the pulsating light of a film projector. Made in U.S.A.

REVIEW Rialto Pictures founder Bruce Goldstein will scoop up the Mel Novikoff award at this year's San Francisco Film Festival, but local audiences have a chance to sample his good work before then during the Castro Theatre's run of Rialto's freshly struck 35-mm print of Jean-Luc Godard's widescreen, red-white-and-blue firecracker Made in U.S.A. (1967). If the picture seems a helter-skelter jumble of contingencies, it's important to remember it was but one of four Godard movies to wash up on these shores during the otherwise turbulent 12-month period slicing through 1967 and 1968 (the other three were 2 or 3 Things I Know About Her, La Chinoise, and Week End). Of these, Made in U.S.A. gives the fullest demonstration of Godard's aim to create a cinema that could take part in the jagged incongruities of modern life. Listing the film's tangled referents — its confluence of aesthetics, politics, and violence crucially hinges on American hardboiled pulp and the real-life murder of Moroccan leftist Ben Barka — doesn't begin to describe Made in U.S.A.'s unexpected pathos. For all its agitprop overtures and modernist complications, the film is also a reflective, conflicted goodbye to the writer-director's formative romances with American culture and Anna Karina. The porcelain actress, already divorced from Godard by the time the picture was made, gives a fragmented, emotional performance almost entirely in close-up. As the long day closes on Made in U.S.A., an old confidante tells Karina's Bogart-like investigator that obsolete categories of Right and Left cannot adequately address political problems, to which she responds, "Then how?" That broken question, the neutron star of Godard's career, shows no sign of letting up. (Max Goldberg)

OPENING

Adventureland I don't know what it was like to grow up in the '80s, or to work at the local amusement park, or to hopelessly search for a job post-college graduation — OK, maybe I can relate to that last one. Either way, it doesn't really matter. Adventureland is the kind of movie that fills its audience with blind nostalgia: you may not know these experiences firsthand, but it sure feels like you do. The plot follows perpetual dork James (Jesse Eisenberg) as he gets forced into a summer job at Adventureland, not quite the happiest place on earth. The work isn't exactly glamorous — think dodging vomit and doling out weak prizes — but the people are the sort of perfect companions you only find in, well, '80s summer comedies. It's a credit to Adventureland and its talented cast that they quickly become more than mere character types. Dream girl Em (Kristen Stewart) is fascinatingly flawed, yet still manages to retain her charm. The real strength of the film, however, is that it picks up where director Greg Mottola's Superbad (2007) left off. Sure, there are dick jokes and pratfalls, but there's also a lot of saccharine-free sentiment. Think The Wonder Years and Freaky Geeks after a ride on the Tilt-A-Whirl. (L:47) Grand Lake, Presidio. (Peltzman)

Alien Trespass New York Times film critic Dave Kehr once wrote, "It is a curious attribute of camp that it can only be found, not made." He was talking about The Lost Skeleton of Cadavra (2004); I'm referring to Alien Trespass, but the idea is the same. After all, who remembers The Lost Skeleton of Cadavra? In a few months, I'm sure Alien Trespass will be an equally distant memory. The more recent film is an homage to '50s sci-fi flicks — particularly the kind of B-movie trash you'd see at a drive-in or lampooned on Mystery Science Theater 3000. Eric McCormack stars as astronomer Ted Lewis and as the alien Urp, who comes to inhabit his body. He's hoping to catch the elusive Ghotu monster before it destroys a quiet desert town. The problem with Alien Trespass is that it's just not funny; it provides the set-up, and then lets it sit there. And while the occasional scene is chuckle-worthy, you're better off renting one of the movies it parodies. (L:28) Bridge, Shattuck. (Peltzman)

The Edge of Love In 1912's World War II London, already famous poet Dylan Thomas (Matthew Rhys) re-encountered Vera Phillips (Keira Knightley), love of his life-turned-torch singer. This revived mutual infatuation proceeded to wreak havoc over the next several years with Thomas' marriage to the mercurial Caitlin MacNamara (Sienna Miller) as well as Phillips' to William Killick (Cillian Murphy), an officer shipped off to Greece for the duration. When the latter finally returns, drink, post-traumatic stress, squandered savings, domestic violence and babies — most of whom preferred not to discuss their illustrious parents in later life, understandably — further deteriorated a most awkward ménage à quatre. Director John Maybury created a brilliantly unpleasant portrait of Francis Bacon in 1998, but neither he nor scenarist Sharman MacDonald (Keira's playwright mum) seem able to drum up much empathy or even interesting antipathy toward these earlier boho Brits. Maybury is nothing if not visually assertive, in alternately prestige-handsome and artily avant ways. But despite the performers' efforts, the people — and the drama — remain stubbornly uninvolved. (1:51) Opera Plaza, Shattuck. (Harvey)

Fast and Furious The cars remain fast; Paul Walker and Vin Diesel, left with no other career options, must indeed be furious. (1:47) Grand Lake, Marina.

Hunger See "Visceral Reality." (1:36) Lumiere, Shattuck.

Rivers of a Lost Coast Tom Skerritt narrates this documentary about fly fishing. (1:24) Four Star.

key theme in John Walter's Theater of War, its focus is on the 2006 Public Theatre production of Bertolt Brecht's Mother Superior and her Children. Walter attempts to illustrate the historical significance of Brecht's great work peripherally through Meryl Streep's artistic process in conveying the message of the play. While showing this, he also manifests the resonance of Brecht's work to the current Iraq war. We are flies on the wall, witnessing the process of the theatre in all its multiple layers while also seeing the importance of Brecht's work in attempting to make sense of the atrocities of life (or war). Valentino, the Last Emperor Valentino, the Last Emperor, Matt Tyrnauer's fly-on-the-wall portrait of the Italian couturier Valentino Garavani on the eve of ceding his fashion empire, isn't all air kisses and caviar dreams. The titular allusion to Bernardo Bertolucci's 1987 epic portrait of China's last living dynastic ruler is an apt one. Like Puyi, Valentino also appears largely sheltered from the behind-the-scenes machinations of regime change by a cocoon of opulent beauty and extravagant luxury. As Valentino prepares for a massive three day blowout in Rome fêting 45 years of dressing the jet set — and bats away the swirling rumors of his imminent retirement — we watch his longtime business partner Giancarlo Giametti run interference as the company's shares are sold from investment group to investment group (Valentino officially retired last year and the company is now owned by the Permira group). And yet, Valentino too seems aware that his aesthetic of glamour for glamour's sake — one that has guided his designs as much as his taste for fine living with his yacht, multiple estates, and bespoke suits — is less and less tenable in an industry that has had to diffuse luxury and cut its losses to ensure its survival. Like his storied clientele, the haute couture tradition on which Valentino cut his teeth and built his business is slowly becoming the stuff of legend. But at least the man knows how to make an exit. CLASS ACTION//

TO: CERTAIN PART AND PRESENT RESIDENTS OF THE BRIDGE MOTEL, 2524 LOMBARD STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that if you reside or will reside at the Bridge Motel for 30 or more consecutive days at any time during the period of December 4, 2003 until April 17, 2008, this Notice is designed to advise you about a proposed final settlement of the lawsuit (hereinafter, "the Settlement") against Defendants VIOMESH PATEL, VINODKUMAR R. PATEL, SANGITA V. PATEL, TARUNKUMAR K. PATEL, MOHAMMED SHAIKH, NASIR SHAIKH, and HANIF SHAIKH, who have been owners or operators of the Bridge Motel.

YOU SHOULD BE FURTHER ADVISED THAT UNLESS YOU FILE A CLAIM AS DESCRIBED IN SECTION V OF THIS NOTICE, YOU WILL NOT RECEIVE ANY BENEFITS FROM THIS FINAL SETTLEMENT.

I. BACKGROUND INFORMATION ABOUT LAWSUIT

Class Representatives Plaintiffs ANITA FRITZ, KENNETH BALDWIN, GREG BREEZE, SANDRA HINES, JOE ESPINOZA, JON EVANS, GREGORY RAUSCH, and SANDRA ESPINOZA, all individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated, filed this Class Action Complaint in San Francisco County Superior Court on December 4, 2006. The Class Action Complaint was filed against Defendants VIOMESH PATEL, VINODKUMAR R. PATEL, SANGITA V. PATEL, TARUNKUMAR K. PATEL, MOHAMMED SHAIKH, NASIR SHAIKH, and HANIF SHAIKH (hereinafter the "Defendants"). On April 17, 2008, Judge John E. Munter signed an order certifying the case as a class action. The class was defined as follows: "All past and present residents of 2524 Lombard Street, San Francisco, California, commonly known as the 'Bridge Motel,' who resided there for at least (30) consecutive days at any time during the period of December 4, 2003 to the present (i.e., April 17, 2008) (hereinafter "the Class Period")."

PLAINTIFFS HAVE NOW REACHED A PROPOSED SETTLEMENT WITH DEFENDANTS. Plaintiffs claim that the Defendants failed to maintain and repair defective conditions at the Bridge Motel, and the Complaint herein sought monetary damages on behalf of certain current and former residents of the Motel. This settlement pertains to all of Plaintiffs' allegations in this class action suit, including but not limited to the following habitability and/or nuisance conditions in the Bridge Motel: vermin infestation, including rats, mice, and cockroaches, lack of adequate heat, structural problems, power outages and inadequate electrical supply.

The Defendants' deny these claims. No decision on the validity of Plaintiffs' claims has yet been made by the Court. II. DEFINITION OF THE CLASS

According to the order signed by Judge Munter, the class certified by the Court consists of all persons who have been residents at the Bridge Motel, located at 2524 Lombard Street, San Francisco, California, for 30 or more consecutive days during the Class Period.

III. NOTICE OF SETTLEMENT HEARING AND YOUR RIGHT TO OBJECT

You are hereby notified that the Court will hold a hearing on June 11, 2009, at 9:30 a.m., before the Hon. John E. Munter in Department 305 of the San Francisco County Superior Court, located at 400 McAllister Street, San Francisco, CA 94102. The purpose of the hearing is to determine whether the settlement agreed to by the Class Representatives and the Defendants is fair, reasonable, adequate and just and should be approved by the Court. At the time of the hearing, the Court will also consider the application of attorneys for Class Representative Plaintiffs for allowance of fees and costs of the lawsuit, or direct that such application be considered at a later date without further notice.

The hearing may be adjourned by the Court from time to time by an announcement at the hearing. Any adjournment of such hearing may be made without further notice. Any class member objecting to the proposed settlement may appear at the hearing on June 11, 2009 at 9:30 a.m. in Department 305 and show cause, if any, why the proposed final settlement should not be approved by the Court or that any part of Plaintiffs' Counsels' application for attorneys fees and costs should not be approved. If you are a class member and you object to the proposed settlement, you may file a written objection with the San Francisco County Superior Court and mail a copy of the objection to counsel for Class Representative Plaintiffs, whose address is listed below, on or before May 28, 2009. You may also object verbally at the hearing whether or not you have filed a written objection.

EACH CLASS MEMBER HAS THE RIGHT TO OBTAIN HIS OR HER OWN COUNSEL. THOSE WHO DO NOT OBTAIN THEIR OWN COUNSEL WILL BE REPRESENTED BY CLASS REPRESENTATIVE PLAINTIFFS' COUNSEL, THE LAW FIRMS OF WARTLETT, WEAVER & SCHREIBER AND JAY B.L. KOSLOFSKY, ESQ.

IV. THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT

The Class Representative Plaintiffs and the Defendants have agreed to a settlement of their dispute. On October 31, 2008, the Defendants and Class Representative Plaintiffs agreed to a final settlement in the amount of One Million Three Hundred Fifty Thousand Dollars ($1,350,000.00). The parties have further agreed that, upon approval of this Court, and upon payment in full of the settlement amount, Plaintiffs shall dismiss this action with prejudice against the Defendants. This settlement is subject to the approval of the Court. Under the terms of the settlement, every member of the class who resided at the Bridge Motel for at least 30 consecutive days during the class period from December 4, 2003 to April 17, 2008 who files a timely claim, and who has not previously opted out of this class action, will be entitled to receive a portion of the settlement.

The Defendants agree to pay the sum of $1,350,000.00 in cash as a settlement of the claims of the class against them, which sum includes attorney fees and costs.

The sum of $17,500.00 per Class Representative is available for payment to each of the Class Representatives in their capacity as Class Representatives (total $140,000.00).

A total of approximately $645,000.00 will be available for payment of the damages to Class Members who resided at the Bridge Motel for a period of at least 30 consecutive days during the period of December 4, 2003 to April 17, 2008, assuming Court approval of Class Representative Plaintiffs' attorneys' fees, and costs as summarized below.

Plaintiffs' counsel estimate that class members will receive approximately $7.00 per day for each day they resided at the Bridge Motel during the period December 4, 2003 to April 17, 2008. The per day figures are approximations based on current information about the number of residents at the Motel. The actual figures may be larger or smaller depending on the number of claims filed. The division of settlement funds for Class Members will be based upon the total number of days that approved claimants resided in the Motel. YOU MUST SUBMIT A CLAIM IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PROCEDURE SET FORTH BELOW IN ORDER TO RECEIVE ANY PORTION OF THIS SETTLEMENT.

As compensation for their individual claims and for the responsibilities they undertook in representing the class, Class Representative Plaintiffs ANITA FRITZ, KENNETH BALDWIN, GREG BREEZE, SANDRA HINES, JOE ESPINOZA, JON EVANS, GREGORY RAUSCH, and SANDRA ESPINOZA, will each receive the sum of $17,500.00 from Defendants, for a total of $140,000.00. These sums are in addition to the damage the named Plaintiffs may claim from the class settlement fund. PERSONS WHO HAVE NOT RESIDED AT THE BRIDGE MOTEL FOR AT LEAST 30 CONSECUTIVE DAYS DURING THE PERIOD FROM DECEMBER 4, 2003 TO APRIL 17, 2008, ARE NOT ELIGIBLE TO PARTICIPATE IN THE SETTLEMENT OF THIS CASE.

Defendants relinquish all rights to the settlement funds. Should any residual funds remain after distribution to the Class Members, Plaintiffs may request that the Court distribute the remaining funds to a charitable organization that serves the population such as that which occupied the Bridge Motel during the Class Period, to wit: indigent and/or disabled tenants. The Court's term for this type of charitable distribution is called "cy pres." The Class Representative Plaintiffs' attorneys will ask the Court to award $450,000.00 (one-third of the total settlement) as reasonable attorneys' fees pursuant to their agreement; $85,000.00 for costs that have already been paid; and $30,000.00 for the cost of administering the final class settlement. Should the Court grant final approval of the settlement, you will not be able to make any further claim against the Defendants (herein based on the claims made by the Plaintiffs in this action, as certified by the Court).

The settlement class is defined as follows: all persons subject to this class action who are or were tenants at the Auburn Hotel for 30 or more consecutive days during the period August 23, 2003 to March 25, 2009 (hereinafter "the Class Period"). 10. The purpose of the hearing is to determine whether the settlement agreed to by the Class Representatives and Defendants NIKITA HOLDINGS, LLC, a California Limited Liability Company, BALWANTSINH D. At the time of the hearing, the Court will also consider the application of attorneys for allowance of fees and costs of the lawsuit, and also for payments to Class Representatives, or direct that such application be considered at a later date without further notice. Any and all class members may appear at the hearing and object to the attorneys' fees and costs application. IV. THE PROPOSED SETTLEMENT 13. The Class Representative Plaintiffs and Defendants NIKITA HOLDINGS, LLC, a California Limited Liability Company, BALWANTSINH D. THAKOR and VIKRAMSINH DEVDHARA have agreed to a settlement in the amount of One Million Dollars ($1,000,000) for the period of August 23, 2003 to March 25, 2009. Under the terms of the settlement, every member of the class who resided at the Auburn Hotel for at least 30 consecutive days during the period August 23, 2003 to March 25, 2009, and who submits a timely claim before October 9, 2009 will be entitled to receive a monetary award based on the number of days he/she resided at the Auburn Hotel during the Class Period. 15. Defendants NIKITA HOLDINGS, LLC, a California Limited Liability Company, BALWANTSINH D. THAKOR and VIKRAMSINH DEVDHARA, through their insurance carriers, agree to pay the sum of $1,000,000.00 in case as a settlement of the claims of the class against them, which sum includes attorneys' fees and costs. 16. The per-day figure is an approximation based on current information about the number of residents at the Hotel during the Class Period. PERSONS WHO HAVE NOT RESIDED AT THE AUBURN HOTEL FOR AT LEAST 30 CONSECUTIVE DAYS DURING THE PERIOD FROM AUGUST 23, 2003 TO MARCH 25, 2009, ARE NOT ELIGIBLE TO PARTICIPATE IN THE SETTLEMENT OF THIS CASE. 20. The Settling Defendants, NIKITA HOLDINGS, LLC, a California Limited Liability Company, BALWANTSINH D. THAKOR and VIKRAMSINH DEVDHARA, relinquish all rights to the settlement funds. Should any residual funds remain after distribution to the Class Members, Plaintiffs may request that the Court distribute the remaining funds to a charitable organization that serves the population such as that which occupied the Auburn Hotel during the Class Period, to wit: indigent and/or disabled tenants. The Court's term for this type of charitable distribution is called "cy pres." 21. The Class Representative Plaintiffs' attorneys will ask the Court to award $333,333.33 (one-third of the total settlement) as reasonable attorneys' fees pursuant to their agreement: approximately $30,000.00 for costs that have already been paid; and $35,000.00 for the cost of administering the settlement. 22. If the Court grants final approval and if you have not opted out of the Class Action, you will not be able to make any further claim against Defendants NIKITA HOLDINGS, LLC, a California Limited Liability Company, BALWANTSINH D. ALT.SEX.COLUMN

A little luck, a little pluck

By Andrea Nemerson

> andrea@altsexcolumn.com

Dear Andrea:

I'm not 40, like the author of the "40 and Frustrated" letter, but I'm afflicted with another "less than desirable" characteristic: color. Oh, and a bit of meat on my bones, although that's never been much of a problem. I'm a black woman and I date(d) all sorts of men. Online has never been the right place for me to meet men because, in a field of redheads and green eyes, men pass right by my photo. I got absolutely no interest except from men I am not interested in. And if I happened to get an interested male inquiry, I too found that the communication petered out quickly.

Several years back, I moved to the city on my own. Finally — no roommates, no significant other, just me. My friends were in relationships or newly married and I had to find activities that allowed me to have fun and meet single men. When I went out with friends, I was always just another girl in the crowd.

I got the best results when I began going out by myself, walking into an establishment where I knew no one, ordering a drink, sitting at the bar, and looking desirable and approachable with a book or a snack. A month ago, I even had a CL Missed Connections ad placed for me by a nice Irish man after visiting a local pub and having a burger and beer. It is a 99.9 percent given that if you are female and alone, a male will walk up to you and begin a conversation.

Despite your age, your looks, your size, your ethnicity, if a man sees you alone, without a crew of other females to choose from, he will feel compelled to find out your story and see if he has a shot with you.

Two years ago, out by myself, I met a man I had eyed a few times over the years. We chatted. We joked. We got to know each other. Two-and-a-half years later, we're still together.

We both have an independent nature, which still leads me to frequent places on my own. Each and every time, I am approached. I'm attractive, but I'm not all that, so this is something any woman can do. I feel that we, as women, need to step it up a notch and realize that we need to depend mostly on ourselves and not our friends or the Internet to hook us up or place us in situations where we'll meet people.

So, my advice to 40 & Frustrated would be to put on a sexy pair of jeans and head to her nearest pub by herself. Leave the girlfriends — who are potential competition whether we like to admit it or not — at home and head out on your own and get what you want.

It will take time to sift through the men, just like online, but being an attractive, witty, sensual, smart woman presenting herself as available will get you WAY more results than presenting yourself as an attractive, witty, sexual, smart woman via some blurry photo surrounded by other blurry photos of other attractive, witty, sexual, smart women.

Love,

Went Out Alone and Got Attached

Dear, um, WOAGA:

Now that is an interesting take!

I mean, sure, the fact that a woman sitting alone at a bar or club will attract a cloud of buzzing males is not news. It is in fact a source of annoyance for women who really do want to be alone, or who are innocently waiting for a friend and would like to enjoy at least a few moments of public solitude, so certainly we know that it works. What's interesting is that hitting the bars or clubs is usually seen as putting oneself into direct competition with other women (or whatever one's category happens to be) who are likewise putting themselves out there. This is true as far as it goes, but you have a good point, not entirely stated, that very few women do go out on their own to meet guys, so actually there is not as much competition as one might think.

Surely you can see why going it alone might not be many women's first choice. It's scary, it's lonely, and one fears that it whiffs at least faintly of desperation, never a lady's preferred perfume. I do think you've done a lovely job of recasting it as one carefully considered option for the plucky and indomitable single gal (sorry, but I am now seeing you as a sort of Doris Day of Color, in a cute shift dress and scarf). The only problem is that lots of people don't drink, or don't want to meet people who drink, or don't want to meet people while drinking. So we will have to redirect some of our plucky, spunky heroines to coffee shops, galleries, and the park on Saturday afternoon. Alone.

If this has worked for you, readers, please let us know.

Love,
Andrea

Revolutionary new drug-free formula helps you regain your youthful prostate function so you'll urinate less often and sleep through the night!

Are you a man who has to get up once or more during the night to urinate? Do you sometimes have trouble getting your stream to start? Do you look for restrooms wherever you go? Do you ever worry that you won't be able to hold it in? If you suffer with these types of prostate problems, don't give up hope because now there's good news! Powerful new formula helps end your urination problems

The amazing new Prostalex Plus drug-free supplement has been scientifically formulated to reduce your need to urinate by combating the natural growth of your prostate, which occurs naturally as you age and is the cause of most urination problems in men. Containing rare, high-potency, all-natural ingredients, the Prostalex Plus formula is unique because it not only stops your constant need to urinate, it helps improve your ability to urinate (so you'll no longer have trouble getting your stream to start), and it helps you maintain a healthy prostate. That means, with Prostalex Plus you can enjoy the freedom of not having to search out a men's room wherever you go, enjoy the luxury of uninterrupted sleep, and enjoy the peace of mind that goes along with having a healthy, youthful, optimally-functioning prostate.

Countless men are raving about Prostalex Plus

Prostalex Plus is the safe, private, all-natural solution that's giving men the results they want without drugs, surgery, or side effects. Just listen to what some of our satisfied customers are saying about Prostalex Plus:

PET OF THE WEEK

Billy (A07031325)

Billy is a 5-year old, black and white kitty. He's a sweet fellow who has had a rough life; he's a former feral cat who has become much more social, but he's still a bit shy. He has sensitive ears and would rather not have them touched, but does like pets under his chin and on his cheeks. Billy needs a nice, quiet home where he can be loved and cared for by someone he can count on.

When you adopt ADULT CATS from The San Francisco SPCA, you'll get all the awesome goodies that come with pets from The San Francisco SPCA: a free first medical exam from a local veterinarian, temporary identification tags, and a medical assistance plan. All this and an absolutely fabulous cat: Senior - $80 (7+ years), Adult - $180 (6 months to 7 years), Young - $225 (under 6 months). San Francisco residents pay an additional $14 License Fee.
